Old Scotia, wake thy mountain strain in all its wildest splendours!
And welcome back the lade again,
Your honour's dear defenders.
Be every harp and viol strung,
'Till all the woodlands quaver;
Of many a band your bards have sung,
But never hall'd a braver.
Then raise the pibroch, Donald Bane,
We're all in key to cheer it;
And let it be a martial strain,
That warriors bold may hear it. Look at the list of offices at the disposal of ir. Mowat for the reward of his henchmen;

Ye lovely maids, pitch high your notes
As virgin voice can sound them,
Sing of your brave, your noble Scots,
For glory kindles round them.
Small is the remnant you will see,
Lamented be the others!
But such a stem of such a tree,
Take to your arms like brothers.
Reise high the pibroch, Donald Bane,
Strike all our glen with wonder;
Let the chaunter yell, and the drone note swell
Till music speaks in thunder. An Awful Death.

What storm can rend your mountain rock?
What wave your headlands shiver?
Long have they stood the tempeat's shock,
Thou know'st they will for ever.
Sooner your eye these cliffs shall view,
Split by the wind and weather,
Than forman's eye the bonnet blue,
Behind the nodding feather.
Orates the pibroch Donald Bane,
Our caps to the sky we'll send them,
Scotland, thy honour who can stain, Scotland, thy honour who can stain, Thy laurels who can rend them?
