Mrs. Morton's Paris Gowns.

It is easy to tell why Mrs. Morton need give no thought to her costumes, as Mr. Worth is their composer. There is a sed dnotive tale affoat that she has twenty that have never been taken from their wrappings, ten for carriage and day wear and ten regal reception robes. It is said the bill Worth rendered was $20,000, as he selected, planned, and made every one of them. $1,000 per gown distances all competition in modest Washington, and Mrs. Morton will be the best dressed as well as the handsomest woman in the administration.

She is not a hit afraid of colors, and in many of her costumes she even touches on the startling shades of red and daffodily pillow. She can do this because her arms and throat are like enow, her face has a soft tings of pink at night, her eyes are dark, and her hair of an iron-gray color, all of which features will enfler any color in dress. Mrs. Morton has a liking for furs, especially scale and otter, and the two are introduced into her evening as well as her day costumes. One of Mrs. Morton's opera closks is raved over as a sweet thing. It is of white broadcloth, very long, lined with rose pink, slashed up the back, and fairly imbedded in crinkly Angora tur.

Samuel Slater's Dream.

An interesting centenary will be cele-brated next December at Pawtucket, Rhode Island, where Samuel Slater, on the 21st of December, 1790, virtually be-gan cotton manufacture in this country, although previous efforts had been made. Slater was a pupil of Arkwright, and as the English law forbade the communication of models of the cotton-spinning machinery to other countries, Slater, trusting to his memory, reconstructed it inder a contract with William Almy and the later than the later and the later than Smith Brown. But for some time ne Smith Brown. But for some time he could not recall a small but essential part of the process, and the tradition is that in a dream he returned to England, examined the machinery, found what he wanted, and upon awaking completed his

Tobacco Habits in the Young.—
Growing youthe should be taught that for them there is no escape from the evil consequences of using tobacco. A physician, recently discussing its action upon the system, sagely said: Its marked ill effect upon the whole economy are better shown in children and young persons. They almost at once from its use become seasmic, thin, and bronzed in color, from its overwhelming influence upon the whole organism. Here we often see a robust, ruddy, active boy or youth suddenly checked in growth of mind and body, and more than likely its demoralizant influences serve to license him in other influences serve to license him in other vices. Its possonous and benumbing in-finences are shown by stamping its youthful victum with a singgismness of expression, both of mind and body, and he is indifferent. He is more indolent, and content to run in grooves, and resigned to inferior surroundings. He is not impatient to rise to a higher plane of thought and action, as he would be without it. The brain seems to be lulled and semidormant, and does not seem to be capable of that consecutive logical thought and sustained mental effort that is its wont, and the memory, one of the most important attributes of mind, is crippled

But he was deeply discouraged. All the day and night he poudered and examined and tested and tried to move the machinery. But still it remained motion-
