I had a terrible leg, with a hole in it as ble as a dollar, and pain that almost set me crazy. I got seared about it, and determined to try Critical Remains. I obtained a set, and inside of five weeks toy leg was healed up as well as it ever was, except the terrible sear it left for a reminder of what was once a terrible sore leg. These REMAINS are worth their weight in gold.

In an educational sense the Crystal Palace is doing a fine work, the schools of art, seience, and literature in connection therewith being admirably managed and comprehensive in character. It would be a thousands pities if this resort of the masses, with its unique capabilities for affording an infinity of improving enteraffording an infinity of improving enter-tainment, were ever to be allowed to fall into decadence. Spirited management is doing its utmost to avoid that, but the proprietary of the Palace is heavily handicapped by the enormous capital sunk in the establishment, and the great annual outlay requisite for its maintenance. The local rating presses specially heavy on the resources of the directors, and it would be well if this could be permanently re-duced, especially as the Palace people provide their own police, water, and lighting. Although the Crystal Palace is a commercial concern, it ought to be regarded more in the light of a national institution than it is, for the obligation of the people at large to the owners does not end, I contend, with the payment of the small admission fee. As it is, the gigantic place is only kept vigorously a-going by its admirable amusement arrangements, summer ballets in the open, illuminated garden fetes, firework displays, and other attractions additional to the splendid per-
