The occasion was the initial one of the series of evenings which the members of the National Club propose to devote to papers by distinguished Canadians on national subjects. Mr. Barlow Cumberland, president of the club, introduced the orator of the evening in a brief speech, in which he stated the objects which the club had in view when they invited double-leaded editorials. Their stunning noise repeated day in and day out, from year's end to year's end, is like the sound of many waters, but it all comes from half a dozen pens. It sounds effective, but it breaks no bones and changes few votes. An educated country will make up its own mind, and it will never dispense with the voice of the men it considers thoughtful, unselfish and independent. A club like this affords a platform for of calm discussion by men who stand in the day-light. Each of us speaks for himself, and will have due weight given, not only to what he says, but to what he is. In considering the position of Canada my first question is whether ground can be found on which men of different views will consent to stand. There is such ground. Whether we separate from the Empire to form an independent state, or remain in the Empire, gradually evolving into a position of closer union and equality of constitutional privilege and responsibility, it is equally a matter of the first importance that Canada be united and strong. No matter, then, which of the two destinies we believe the future to have in store for us, our duty is

To DE CANADA FIRST MEN. future to have in store for us, our duty is TO BE CANADA PIRST MEN.

This is the ground that both unionist and separatist can take honestly. If a man professes independence with the intention of immediately breaking Canada up and handing it over the property of the another power, he, of course, canada up another power another power and the property of the major and the major up men know that revolutions are not things to be played with, and that national weakness is always next door to national humiliation. There are two parties to the existing union between Britain and Canada, and if one of them—represented by our House of Commons—has no desire to break the union the other has just as little. Lest month I was in Halifax and took a sail on the harbor. Near the dockvard six ships of war, each a match for a fleet of the last generation, slept on the water. Beside them lay two or three modern torpedo boats that had just crossed the Atlantic, and not far off was a dry dock built at the joint expense of the British and Canadian Governmedts and the city of Halliax. Beyond the harbor at York redocht and on the opposite point of McNab's island, Britain is now spending a part of its great special war vote, exhaus of water from Mrs. Harding's flowing well which damages her property; said stream not being conveyed into Mr. Sylvester's drain. Referred to atreet and bridge committee.

From Mrs. R. Keenan, asking for a remission of taxes on her buildings on Kent St., on the grounds that the same is vacant. Referred to Court of Revision.

From Bradahaw Bros., asking for a remission of taxes on the Queen's hotel, in consequence of a license being refused them. Referred to Court of Revision.

From Col. Deacon, asking that his resignation as chairman of the board of health, submitted at last meeting of the council be accepted.

From Jscob Morgan and others, in reference to a crossing at Peel and Albert streets that had been taken up, and asking that gravel be up men know that revolutions are not things to be played with, and that national weakness ing a part of its great special war vote, ex-tending the old forts and fitting them with new armaments.
