insolal to the Warder looks the earth against their operations. Now that the fairs and most of the threshing is over they can turn their whole atseeding time of 1891, and October is virtually the month for fall plowing. Before the twentieth October one day's plowing is se good as two in November, the day heing much longer, yields larger acreege gone over, bendes ease and pleasure to man and team Compared with the behind time tarmer we see a great differene; the man who is behind has to hurry himself and teem overmuch, in order to get over the necessary and desired ground, besides all this he imposes upon himself the unnecessary ruiden and vague uncertainty of obtaining the desired end. He has to plow in November when the air is chilling, and mornings find the fields with about two inches of frozen surface, which help to make the work most disagreeable to the behind time farmer. Land cannot soil turned in its natural condition, with plenty of time to pack before winter. Plowing is nonemally far advanced this fall, the agriculturists having taken.
