

Reviews.

Mr. J. Oke of Kilmount, spent Thursday in town on business for his congregation.

Mr. Henry Dewey of Bentley, spent Saturday in town. Times are very good north.

Give me $2 worth of old English condition powder is quite a common expression for Highbottom to hear.

Mr. James G. Mark is visiting old friends and relatives for a few weeks. He lives in Bradford now and likes the place well.

For the best value in all the latest styles in boots and shoes, trunks, valises, etc., go to Hyman and Co., 1st door east of Daly House, Kent street, Lindsay.—43-44.

The regular monthly meeting of the W.C.T.U. will be held Monday, Nov. 3rd, at half past 8 o'clock in the Y.M.C.A. rooms. All ladies are cordially invited to attend.

Rev. G. W. Dewey of Queen St., Salem and Randolph streets, next Sunday fills on invitation the pulpit of the famous Woodgreen tabernacle, Toronto. Mr. Dewey is a rising young man.

"Oh, women, in our hours of ease!" "Scott, 'tis just too oft, familiar with her face, We first endure, then pity, then embrace."

"Pope."

We will send THE WARDER from now until 1st January 1891, for $1 each. Now is the time to subscribe, get fourteen months reading at the low rate of seven cents per month.

Derryville and Camington local orange lodges, will celebrate the anniversary of the powder plot by a supper at the Queen's Hotel, Camington, on the evening of 5th November.

Mr. A. H. Carl of Cobocook was in town yesterday on business, his annual visit. Cobocook is quiet but in the old place. He has in a good stock of fall and winter goods, which he sells cheap for cash. Give him a call.

Sgt. Major Martin, who has been appointed to act as fire warden and sanitary inspector during the illness of Inspector Hughes, has his office over Graham & Mark's store, corner of Kent and William streets. Entrance from William street.

Mr. John Cook, son of Cameron's worthy citizen, is attending the Normal school at Ottawa and reports very doing splendidly. He is also a general favorite, especially among the fair sex, it being not an unusual occurrence to find him the admirer of a baker's half dozen. John is a clever one.

The management of the Opera House has the pleasure of recommending Adele Frost and her talented company to the lovers of the legitimate drama. The great eastern provinces speak in glowing terms of this most excellent company. They appear at the Opera House, Friday, Nov. 7th.

Mrs. Montgomery, wife of Prof. Henry Montgomery, is enjoying with her sister Mrs. Wood of Millbrook, a pleasant visit with her friend Mrs. E. Gregory in Lindsay. Many old friends are rejoiced to see Mrs. Montgomery back from her western United States home even for a brief visit.

Mr. J. E. Holmes, the genial president of the Dysart cheese factory, sold the October make of cheese of that factory on Saturday, to Messrs. Dundas & Flavelle Bros. at 10 cts. per lb. Mr. Holmes reports the patrons of the factory as being well satisfied with the year's operations.

We cheerfully recommend any preparation that stands as high as Steele's Compound into the confidence of the public solely through its merits. For wanting disease of throat or lungs all druggists will testify to its efficacy.—54-1.

Money. Mr. E. R. Reynolds, of Toronto, is offering to lend half a million dollars to farmers wishing to pay off old mortgages or purchase farms. Every farmer with mortgage on his farm should communicate at once with this gentleman. See advertisement in another column.

Still another witness to the success of two-rowed barley is found in the person of William Adams, Esq., deputy-revee of Emily, Mr. Adams, like many another Victoria farmer, sowed late and thickly. Yet he has the pleasure of having an abundant yield of splendid grain. Two-rowed barley will form a staple product on his farms for the coming years. Let farmers enquire of those who have even half tried the English barley, and consider the British market receives four times as much as does the Yankee; then enter for the big market and the high price.

The Cartwright Meeting.

The meeting at the opera house on Monday evening was not as large, or as influential as we had expected to find it. For some cause it was not well attended, nor was it as enthusiastic as might have been expected on the eve of an election. This the speaker seemed to feel, for he did not warm up to his subject as he perhaps otherwise would. But it must be said that Sir Richard made a very good speech, but it was hardly up to his former utterances. We have heard him when we thought he had done far better. He is certainly an able man, and by far the ablest man in the ranks of the opposition, who have undertaken to soil the good steamship of Sir John Macdonald in the past, as well as the present. He presents his case in strong and forcible language and appeals to the practicable sensibilities of his audience, but he signally failed to show how Laurier, Blake, or better still himself, could improve the trade relations of the Dominion with the United States. We require no one to point out the disease, unfortunately we know all about it, and how it is paralyzing our political systems from the Atlantic to the Pacific oceans. That which we wished to learn from the great political doctor, was how we could best remedy the paralytic evil which had assailed our country, but the speech of the evening gave us no notion, no success sufficiently reasonable, that any dependence could be placed upon it, and we had to leave the hall no wiser than when we went in. We all deplore the tariff war, we know how we are situated, and of the fearful odds against which we have to contend. But what is to be done about it, while the Americans are determined to pursue a policy so adverse to the prosperity of their people.

The harbor and protections we gave the refugees during the late civil war, and their raids made from here, upon the country, gave the Americans a clear idea of what might be done in case of war of any kind, and they speedily resolved upon a policy that would prevent this country becoming a power that might menace them in the future. They are evidently under the impression that we will in time prefer to be a part of the Empire, and consequently the terms offered us, for better trade relations with them are simply annexation. When we are prepared to negotiate upon that basis, then will the matter be taken up and the case gone into, but not before. Sir John has, and perhaps ever will reject the terms, and the country has so far respected his opinions, but does Sir Richard accept them? Is he willing to do his title and become a subject of the United States? If he does, why does he not say so in plain language so that we can know exactly what he means and that which he intends? We are told to ask for annexation and we will get Free Trade. Sir John says no! We will remain as we are, and do as well as we can. Those who do not approve of the policy must respect Sir John for his independence and his downright honesty. But does Sir Richard as emphatically say yes! We want Free Trade, and to secure it we will go for annexation. Here would be present a square issue when the friends of either policy could show their strength. But here the instructions become doubtful. Sir Richard turns a sharp corner and goes on talking grandiloquently about a union of the English speaking people, and when an united defying the whole world, which is a piece of unbecoming absurd, nonsensical and ridiculous, as moonshine loyalty. Here the honorable and gallant Knight displays his insincerity, that he is now anxious to improve the condition of his party than the trade of the country. If Free Trade would be so beneficial to the country as he says it will, annexation might not after all be a high price to pay for it. It is such in his opinion, why has he not the candour to say so? We would then know when to find him. This shuffling and double dealing with an important subject is not very satisfactory to those who are suffering with a large amount of produce on hand, and shut out of a market whereby they could dispose of it and relieve themselves from obligations which are dragging them down to ruin. It is only a mockery of their calamity.

We are persuaded, if Sir John was fully convinced that Free Trade and annexation, for they must go together, were the best for the country he would say so. He is not a stubborn or a cast-iron man, but has many a time changed his policy when he saw it was right to do so; and we believe if Sir Richard had no doubt about it, he would not fail to declare his convictions. He has measured swords with the ablest men in parliament over less important matters, and we cannot think for a moment that he would back down now if he was quite sure, that policy was for the best. He is evidently using it now not for patriotic, but for party purposes.

Let the people bear in mind, especially the independent reformers, that Mr. Levanbrough is put into the field, as an available man, for the purpose of retarding the odious Patent Combination. The coming election can make no change in the government, but if it were possible, it would do no real good, while the Americans are of the same mind they are in agreement. Both parties in the States are agreed to the policy of restricted intercourse. Leading men here, both conservatives and reformers have tried their hand at negotiation and returned fully convinced that they had been a fool's errand. Then how utterly wicked on a fool's errand, the electors should not forget, has for its object, and that it has no other but the advancement of Sir Richard Cartwright and his party.

AN OLD REFORMER.

RINMOUNT.

I sometimes see accounts in your paper of good shooting being done by some of the riflemen in our county towns. Well, we have some good riflemen here, and we have some ladies who can handle a rifle well. Mr. W. Morgan who resides about two miles north-west of this village had occasion to leave home one day not long since, and Mrs. Morgan hearing a noise near the barn and thinking that possibly a hawk was paying his attentions to the fowls, went to see what the stir was about taking a repeating rifle in her hand. On nearing the place, and looking over a fence, she saw a red fox on the run for the woods, but he was too late; though on the bound when Mrs. Morgan fired, the fox fell dead with a bullet through his heart.
