What Our Nation Needs.

What our nation needs is heroes; Heroes who will work with might, Doring censure, only asking Knowledge that their cause is right; Men and women, carnest workers,

Who can feel anothers woe,

et and hand torever ready,

Doing good where'er they go. Who, devoid of superstition, See what /s, not what has been; Who would see all brothers equal, And would rid the world of sin. Do you wonder at the fallen

Ones, who throng each lane and street! If so, live ope month among them, See the sights your gaze would meet; See the wretchedness and sorrow.

See the misery and woe, That the tiny, lisping infant, With his first words learns to know. See the power of wealth grow stronger, As 'is festered long and well. Till the mines of fer Siberia No more herrid tale can tell.

See the lives no ray of sunshine Ever finds an entrance in. Want, and misery, and ein. Trampled in the mire and slime, while the very heads of justice, Seem to sanction wealthy crime;

Then, if you can, valuly wonder, Why some lives so sinful are, Though you'll be more apt to question, Why they are not worse, by far. Thousands of your fellow creatures
Faint and die for want of bread,
And you cannot shrink the knowledge
Their lives "he upon your head,"

Many more are daily sinking Into lives of sin and shame;
When a helping hand would save them,
Olve them honor, hope, and fame,
If you idle stand and watching
White a brother breasts the wave,

Are you innocent of murder If he finds a watery gravef Where's the good of fine asylume

If you starve and crush the poor one That some day they may come inf Honest pay is all they ask. Then each man can make his own home

Dare you kneel on silken cushi Pray, O Lord, Thy will be done; Unto me, give, Lord, Thy blessing. As I have to others done? Do you really wish for blessings. As to others you have given?

If they were, pray let me ask you what would be your chance of Heaven?

Help the weary, cheer the lowly, Make each sad face beam with mirth, Raise the fallen, broken hearted; Then twere heaven here on earth. Mary Maymard, in American Speciate

In view of attempts being made on the part of Canadian exporters of eggs, to open up trade with Great Britain, the following brief summary prepared by the London, England, correspondent of "The Canadian Grocer and General Storekeep er," Toronto and Montreal, will be of great value:

London, Nov. 8, 1890.

Sources of supply.

The trade here is eagerly competed for by the neighboring continental countries, such as France, Holland, and Denmark, warre facility in point of onick despatch.

A few years ago it was stated before the Senate committee that the C.P.R. was hauling 42 per cent. of all the tea need in the United States. Now that trade has been increasing and is increasing day by day. I am told that this year they had 10,000 carloads of stuff to carry from Sault Ste. Marie through to Boston. Now I think it you will only look closely at the way in which these great railway magnates of the United States.

These are the gr These are chiefly due to the necessarily longer transit, as compared with Continental supplies. Whatever facilities of chesp and rapid freight transit are provided by those steamship lines anxious to pioneer the trade, the undoubted extracted before regular channels of out-let are found and the trade shapes itself into a groove, would necessitate that the eggs should be laid down here in an equally fresh condition as the best French qualities, to incure them obtaining that average level of price which we estimate would pay Canadian exporters. The question, after all, turns on the blunt point, whether quality for quality, and price for price, Canadian eggs can shew equal or better value as compared with those supplies which have so far served this market so well.

A turther difficulty would be found in the incorrections of the timespectage after the Canadian and pretended that he was a great friend of Canada, and that this this market so well.

A further difficulty would be found in the inexperience the Canadian shippers possess as to the various details of selection and packing demanded by the trade mercial union would make us all rich, that it would give us markets for our manufactures, and then he went over there and told these manufacturers that he would bring half a continent to trade that they produce themselves, it is not much of a market for us. They swam around some time clinging to the cance and calling for help, but most folks were not up then. However, just when they were about giving up, James and Henry Gidley came to their resone. The boys were taken home, and after spending a while in warm blankets were consiliright again.

That the requirements of this market for us. But if they were only going to carry out commercial union that would not amount to anything. The Canadian people would settle that very quickly. But there are many elements of danger in connection with this thing. These people will not stop at simply advocating an idea of that sort.
