The City of New York's Poor.

The New York World recently made an exhaustive investigation of the real condition of the very poor in the Empire City. In order to make a safe estimate of the number of people seeking work and finding none, a reporter visited various trades and callings. The revelations are as appalling as they are suggestive. In proferring his detailed description of the frightful condition of the poor in New York, the World says: The sun rises every day above this great and wealthy city, his beams fall upon the hapless faces of more than one hundred and fifty thousand people who begin each twenty-four hours of their pilgrimage through life with the haunting fear that hunger will be their portion for the day. Every night that wraps in its mantle of darkness this busy hive of humanity is in its thousands upon thousands of men, women, and children struggling with desperation for the means to procure a place whereon to lay their wearied heads and dream away a few of the moments that mean nothing but despair to them in their waking hours. It is a sad story, this chronicle of the woes of a great city's unfortunate; but its grim reality cannot be avoided. Nor can it be distorted into figures that might please. The facts speak with unerring force. They show the state of the city of New York, with its gigantic fortunes, its wonderful business interests, its evidence of growing prosperity on every side there is still to be solved the mighty problem of the poor.

At no period in the city's history have so many people been without employment as during the present winter. Seasons of remarkable business depression have come and gone; panics have staggered many lives of industry from their lofty towers; waves of unemployment have been experienced during the past few decades, but their consequences were not as far-reaching for evil, or their results so fully apparent as the unknown causes that today afflict nearly one-ninth of New York's population to be without occupation or work of any description that might aid them to keep the wolf from the door, without assistance from some other source.

In the skilled trades this remarkable condition of affairs is more than usually striking. There are over one hundred thousand mechanics and artisans of every description vainly seeking employment. There are 50,000 people who have no trades, but who have the desire and ability to work at anything that might enable them to fight the battle of life, also yearning for something to do. Many of these are women, some, and a very large proportion of these, mothers of helpless families, who despairingly seek from day to day for the means to help them to put honestly earned bread in the mouths of their children. Almost ten thousand more are made up of that drifting population—the weak and the outcast—who can not for work or the sweets of life as purchased by the toil of hand or brain, and whose existence on earth seems to be at best only a hard struggle with a condition of things in which they have no choice, and, having none, have listlessly allowed themselves to drift along the tide of misfortune, until hope has long since been blotted from their minds.

Some Foolish People

Allow a cough to run until it gets beyond the reach of medicine. They often say, "Oh, it will wear away," but in most cases it wears them away. Could they be induced to try the medicinal medicine called Kemp's Balm, which is sold on a positive guarantee to cure, they would immediately see the excellent effect after taking the first dose. Price 50 cents and $1. Trial size free. At all druggists.—36-ly

An inactive or torpid liver must be aroused and all bile removed. Buckle's Pills are best for old or young.—72-4.

The Best Protection.

A safe protection from the results of colds, sneezes, hoarseness, hoarseness, sore throat, and all painful diseases, Hagedy's Yellow Oil holds first place. Its efficacy has been proved thousands of times. It should be found in every household.—74-2.

As a pick-me-up after exercise or exposure, Milburn's Beef, Iron and Wine is grateful and comforting.—72-4.

Misery vs Comfort.

Misery is the result of biliousness or liver complaint. Comfort is the first result of using Buckle's Blood Purifier as a remedy. Cure is the final result always obtained. We back this with the strongest proof by testimonials from reliable European people.—74-2.

Some symptoms of worms are—Fever, colic, variable appetite, restlessness, weakness and convulsions. The infallible remedy is Dr. Lee's Worm Syrup.—72-4.
