WHITRY. The only criminal case at the Whitby as-store, Queen vs. Wm. Thompson, a Brock farmer. The prisoner's brother, Thomas, is married to one of the Greggs, and both fem-ilies are wealthy residents of the front of Brock. Thos. Thompson is a sallow, young liverk. Thes. Thempson is a sallow, young looking man, and his wife is reported as wearing the breeches. About the first of last November Wm. Thomson heard that his brother and wife had been into another row, and that Thomas as neual came out second best. Its went to Thomas' place to see about it, and tound the latter and his wife sitting in the kitchen. She refused to allow William the kitchen. She refused to allow William to come into the bones, but Thomas asked his brother in and offered him a chair. She got the mop to strengthen her argument, and his William over the head. He wrested it from her grasp. She immediately setzed him by his bushy whiskers and a scuttle enemed, during which she lost her footing and pulled William down upon her and received some injuries. Upon gotting her hold locaened he rose, and she took the pantry side of the house whereupon she led William a lively dance around the room with the aid of flat irone, pots, potste masher, the broom, and a few other articles. Time was only called when she fired everything in the kirchen at him a few times, he holding a chair for a shield. The magistrates then got the matter in hand, and commenced issuing animoness until the matter was finally sent here to court. The doctors swore the woman was not burf to any PORT PHERY.

Hay and Gordon assisted with vocal music. The chief feature of the program me however, was a debate on the subject "Resolved, that pride and ambition have caused more misery than ignorance and superstition." Mesars Sproule and Mo-Fadyen on the affirmative, and Mesars its and Wester and W Hay and Woolfard on the negative. After being ably debated by both sides the committee gave their decision in favor of the affirmative. The visiting brethren and staters from Bobesygeon were made heartily welcome. We hear sometimes of people who have been soured by misfortune or injustice retiring from the world. The more fools they. The world can do without them. but they cannot so well do without the world. The more they mope in solitude, the more unhappy they must necessarily become, for man is constitutionally gra garious and social, and cannot live a hermit life without violating the conditions upon which his mental health de pende. The most terrible punishment which the law can inflict upon a oriminal is the living death of perpetual solitary confinement. What downright idiocy, then, it must be to seek in loneliness a cure for rhenmatism, neuralgia, croup, sore balm of sorrow. It will be said, perhaps, that the con- rheumatism, solutions of religion may be enjoyed by those who abandon the active duties of life and seconds themselves from their fellow-man. We doubt the truth of this fellow-men. We doubt the truth of this theory. Religion, real religion, is active, social, beneficent, not inert, morose and selfish; it seeks to soothe the sorrows of others, and does not waste itself in idly moping over ones own grievances.

Rudvard Kipling Confesses

Rupert Kipling, the roung English sovetist, in a press letter from Chicago writes as follows: The other sight of the evening was a horror. The little tragedy played itself out at a neighboring table where two pimply young reprobates were making the girls drunk. They gave them red wine and then white, and the voices rose slightly while the maiden check flushed. I watched, wishing to stay, and the youthe drank till their speech thickened and their eyeballe grew watery. It was At the she couldn't keep her leet. The four linked arms, and staggering, flickered out into the street-drunk as lords! They disappeared down a side avenue, but I could hear their laughter long after they were out of sight. And they were all four children of sixteen and seventeen. Then recenting provious opinions, I became a prohibitionist. Better it is that a man should go without his beer is public places, and content bimeelf with swearing at narrow mindedness of the majority; better it is to poison the inside with very vile temperance drinks, and to buy lager furtively at back doors than to bring semptation to the lips of young tools such as the four I have seen. I understand now why preachers rage against drink. I have said:-
