Which Christ Never Recognized-A Lay Sermon of Universal Application

Q.—What is the chief end of man?
A.—Man's chief end is to glorify God and foy Him forever.—Westminster Cate-

It must be deemed unfortunate that, in a summary of religious doctrine from which o many human beings have received their Arst distinct notions of God's government and man's duties, the primary and most important truth should have been set forth so vaguely and obscurely. How many of the young learners of that catechism have any clear perception of what is meant by either question or answer?

But dissipate all obscurity in the statement of the problem and its solution, and the matter is still seriously objectionable. The existence of each individual is made to have two purposes or aims—first, God's glory; next, his own enjoyment. He is calinto being to gratify two selfish ends-one the Creator's, the other his own, This must be wrong. God has not created us to the end that He may be glorifled, nor with any such purpose, but in obedience to the dictates of His infinite benevolence. He has given us being in order to increase the infinity of good which pervades the universe. He has endowed us with reason and consciousness, not commanding us to glorify Him, not bidding us enjoy Him, but exhorting us to omit no opportunity of doing good-of diffusing true knowledge, wisdom, happiness, blessing. In short, God has not created us to subserve any selfish end of His own, nor will He hold us guiltless if we pursue only such ends as

Am I wrong in assuming that our ethical and clerical teachers are generally deficient in their calculations on this head-that their point of view is insufficiently elevated and their requisitions too scanty? Is not the vulgar notion that to refrain from doing ill to our neighbor is virtue, somewhat countenanced by the usual tenor of moral exhortation? Does not the commandmentkeeping squanderer, on his own luxurious appetites, of the

AVERAGE COININGS OF TEN HUMAN BEINGS, pass in society as an innocent and often as

It seems evident that a radical reform in the popular apprehensions of religious teaching, if not in the teaching itself, is here need-Since the earthly pilgrimage of the Divine Man of Sorrows, we have had few preachers who said frankly and pointedly, How hardly shall they that have riches enfor int the Kingdom of God!" "Sell all that thou hast give to the poor; then come and follow Me," etc., etc. Do we realize that these were not the exaggerations of petulance or asceticism, but the simple, natural conditions of spiritual health, lumination and progress? required was the disencumbering of the soul of clogs which embedded it and bore it parthurd. What Christ said of wearn, its innuences and proper uses, had

s as true in New England as it was in Palestine-as true in 1946 as it was in the year 1. In truth-wealth employed only or mainly to subserve personal ends is in its nature incompatible with a true life or with the purpose of such a life. The man of sub-stance who regards his riches as means of luxury, of elegance, of power (other than the power to relieve and bless), or of continuing such advantage to his descendants, is inevitably, par ably beclouded as to the very purpose for which life was given him. His aims are selfish and grovelling, his understanding darkened, his faltering, evading, feeble etforts at goodness are tainted by the sin of Ananias and Sapphira. His fealty to Mam-

WILL EVER CLASH WITH HIS DUTY TO GOD. The true disciple of Christ regards himself but as the steward of whatever worldly goods Providence has placed in his hands, From these he is to satisfy the necessities of those dependent upon him; all beyond belongs to his Master, and is to be dispensed according to His plain directions. Not that he is compelled to divest himself to-day of the means of relieving want to-morrow; that would be acting the part of a prodigal and thoughtless steward; but he is to dispense er reserve whatever has been confided to him with simple reference to the highest good of ail. All that he has being the rightful promeding to the model ever before him in the dispensation of rain and sunshine. He whose sympathies or beneficent efforts are circum-cipled by any boundary of family, seek neighborhood or nation, is most imperfect in his obedience to the Father of Lights,

On no one point is error more comme or more vital than on this. A life devoted mainly to what it deemed innocent, though solfish ezjoyment, is not usually regarded as inconsistent with a Christian profession.
The wealthy desciple may devote half his time to a round of visits, dinners, tours and and with little danger of reproach from his own drugged conscience, yet it would difficult to say wherein such a life excelled that of the less depraved heathen of our own or ancient times. He that lives main to himself and his kindred cannot truly be said to live to God, no matter whether he pray with his face to Jerusalem, Mecoa, Rome or the sky. There is no savor or real Godlikeness in a life so devoted.

The assumed innocence of a life of pomp and luxury will not bear a searching examination. Is it not possible that such life may be lived innocently, no matter how liberally it may be garnished with titles and prayers. The man of subtance who lives in luxury cannot fail to render the lives of other human beings merely auxiliary to his own enjoyment. Where some are only served, others must needs be merely servants; where some are be habitually gratified, others muet degenerate into the mere instruments of gratification, the machines whereby a certain quan-tum of supposed enjoyment is produced. Whenever one man
