been neglected in contributing the elements of government? In past ages when knowledge was limited to few, when intellectuality was but a spark in the general mental twilight, brute force obtained the ruling power. "Might made right;" and even the peaceful sway of the Lord Jesus was inaugurated by hideous atrocity and bloodshed. In such an age it was perhaps but natural that the physically stronger should usurp all righta in government and ownership. The accepted conditions of life recognized the power of physical force. Under such conditions the weaker sex were, as a matter of course, degraded. Women were practically the property of their husbands, and had no rights that they were bound to respect. The subjection of woman as an inferior being intellectually, was an undisputed creed. With the progress of time. and the general diffusion of Christian knowledge, the condition of women slowly, but sureiv, improved. Here and there, now in one country, and now in another, the rays from the great sun of righteousness began to pierce the gloom of her degradation; and the voice of Jesus, sounding down through the ages, bid her arise to life and light and privilege.
