The first Sabbath eve we were on deck, delaying to go below, hoping the fog would lift. It is really dreary to be en-circled by the impenetrable mist and to would lift. It is really dreary to be encircled by the impenetrable mist and to hear the dismal sound of the fog-horn continually. All at once the Invisible hand lifted the heavy curtain of fog, clear from the waters, and rolled them away up out of sight and revealed to our astonished sight "a vessel," looking magnificent in the moonlight as she slowly moved over the waters. She seemed to be so close to us, we could see it so plain, even the ropes of the rigging were distinctly visible, but the sallors said she was probably two miles away, At we gazed in delighted wonder, a beautiful sight was presented; a single rocket was sent up, immediately followed in quick succession by others, then a whole shower of fireworks greeted us to be answered from the forecastic of our own vessel by a brilliant display of colors. The water was so calm and the silvery moon with her starry hosts illumined the heavens, therefore, the picture was enough to thrill one with adoration.

"Good Friday" was made memorable to those on the Servia by a burial at sea, (a very old Swedish lady died of extreme weakness and sea-sickness.) All of her family were in America, they having sent for her to come to them with friends. At twelve o'clock the vessel almost stopped, the bell tolled, and as the coffin was carried to the side of the vessel the Swedes sang a hymn, the burial service was read, followed by another hymn, and the body was consigned to the deep. The whole scene was inexpressably solemn.

Sir George Otto Trevelyan, replying to General Loder, said that the fourth report of the Colonization Board was nearly ready, but owing to the absence of some members of the board whose signatures were necessary he would be unable to lay it on the table until November.

The Government did not intend to ask a what peril meant, at least some thought they did, as everything moveable was tossing about in wild confusion. Sunday evening the pilot vessel was sighted, then there was eager watching until he came on board the Servis; it was dark before he left the vessel, and entered the little boat to come to us. The waves were rough and often the lighted lantern in the bow of the boat would be lost to sight in the trough of the sea, and again as it further vote of money, as the former vote was not yet exhausted.
