Human life is supposed to be protected by the State which has enacted rigid laws for the punishment of murderers. The whole machinery of the law is quickly set in motion when a murder is committed, and our people generally delight to see justice meted cut. There is, however, a cacrifice of human life going on in our midst every day, which seems to be unheeded. Intants are allowed to sicken, starve and die owing to the administration of poor and worthless foods. Improper dieting is carrying off thousands or innocents every year.

'For God and Home and Native Land.

The Punishment of Children. When a mother inflicts punishment pon her child it is generally done upon rassed with domestic cares until patience almost ceases to be a virtue. Just at that unlucky moment the child will commit some indiscretion. Trivial it may the impulse of the moment. She is harbe and is in ninety-nine cases out of a stone unturned to insure success to our worried a molebill looms up like a mountain. Without thinking she boxes the child over the ear, strikes him upon the head or shakes him, until the poor child doesn't know which will come loose first, his teeth or his hair. A moment later the mother feels a pang of regret, but the harm has been done and the child's self-respect has been injured. For that is what corporal punishment does for a child more than anything else. By foolish notions of punishment we kill self-respect in our offspring in childhood, and then, when they grow up, we wonder what has become of ir. Mothers frequently, it seems to me, punish their does he would be seen further than from light which can be seen further than anyting else.

But with his boy the average father has no such scruples, and he im marvel much, but cannot doubt that the marvel much, but cannot doubt that the father has no such scruples, and he implants in the nature of his offspring an plants in the nature of his offering an example of brutality that may require years and years to efface, and which is ofttimes never obliterated. I give it as my candid opinion that if the average father knew the thoughts of his boy at the time he is punishing him he would never finish the ordeal.

never finish the ordeal.

I will not say that the punishment of children con be dispensed with in every instance. No possible rule can apply to all cases, since every instance is a law unto itself. At the same time striking a child should be employed only as the very last resort, whereas now it is used in all too many cases as the first. Kindness and firmness, when brought together, form the best basis of a child's education, Mothers should learn to control hasty

Many are inclined to believe that the State should interfere in some way with a view of preserving infant life. We are of the opinion that a better work can be done for the little ones by kind talk and the use of moral sussion. Physicians and wise mothers are doing a grand work by advocating the use of factated food, that great preserver of infant life. Lactated food being a perfect substitute for breast milk, means health, strength and life for the infant. No other food has built up such a record of success as an article of infant nourishment. The first and great lesson which women must learn in this matter of punishment is the value of self-control.

The father of a household goes about his punishment in a more matter of-fact and cold-blooded manner. His only knowledge of the cause is told him by bis wife. She "can do nothing with Johnnie." and so he must. And he sets out to do it and show his "superiority!" Silently his wrath is ted.
