we would give you some little teken by which to remember the Braules' pupils. During your three years stay with us you have been our trusted and genial friend as well as our highly esteemed teacher, always cheerrully and kindly helping us over every difficulty we met with, and in our moments of despair it was you who with gentle encouraging words taught us to look onward and upward, patiently guiding us up the hill of knowledge, with thoughts for none others than for our mental and physical interests. But instead of returning your kindness, we by our despotic natures continually tried to arouse your indignation and anger, but you gently chid our evil actions and turned our wandering thoughts to our much loved booke, without any sign of resentment on your part. Please accept this present, not for its intrincic value, but as a token all our affectionate, true friendship and esteem. We wish you prosperity and success in all your enterprises.
