At 9 o'clock the members adjourned to the Collegiate Institute Notes.

The public meeting of the literary society on Friday evening in many respects was a pronounced success. It had been well advertised, and the hail was comfortably filled. Considerable trouble had been taken to prepare the stage for the cocasion, and the hangings and fioral decorations presented a pleasing effect. Mr. Smedley, banjo soloist, was accorded an enchusiastic reception, but net more enthusiastic than his performance designed been taken to prove unworthy sons of those who had done so much for orangemen in the past.
