The effect of these salutary changes, was to relieve the public of fees to the amount of about £160,000 a year, besides various allowances made to officers. It has frequently been urged against the reform party in this province that it is the party which does not reform, but that measurements that the procession ut stands for abuses. which the conservatives strive to do away with—the fee system, for instance. In reading Caassell's History of England, I was very much struck with the similarty of the English reformers (so called) and our local fee-defenders, Page 418 reads "May 7, 1812.—Mr. Greevy called the attention of the House to the tellerships of the exchequer. These offices were the most impudent of sinecures, the chief and almost only duties being the receipt of a wounded, and much property destroyed by a cyclone in T-xas on Saturday night.

The Irish flag is playing such a prominent part in American affairs just now that it would not be surprising to hear of an Irish home rule measure at Washington making the ment against the abolition of these scanda-lous offices. so familiar does it sound, instead of "Reformers" of 80 years ago. Sir Oliver Mowat dismisses Elgin Myers and appoints his son to office. He preaches patriotism and practises nepotism just as the Grenvilles death-like grasp, and shows no desire of driving ahead, his "sole discoverable idea" is to stop still and make speeches from the box seat. In a former letter I referred briefly to the nepotism of Lord Grey, a Liberal, by the way. To show how such practices were and are regarded as acts of corruption, I will quote from Miss Martineau's History of England, page 125.

"The only approach to a doubt on this part of Lord Grey's character was caused by his profuse distribution of offices among his relatives; and he thought with great simplicity that he had disposed of this complaint in his speech of this night by asking whether these many relations did not do their work well. . . . Could such a man overlook the truth that it is unfair to exclude others from office by filling departments with members of one family, and detrimental to the interests of the state to have in its departments an overruling cast of ideas and feelings? Did he not know how strong was the national he not know how strong was the national response to Canning when he complained of the monopoly of Government by 'a few great families'? And could such a man SIR,—The merits and demerits of the fee or suppose that the complainants were think-ing only of the salaries that his relations engrossed and not of the honors, powers,

Now mark what befell him: In the house of Commons, on July 3, 1865, Mr. Ward Hunt moved a vote of censure, saying that "the noble and learned lord had not displayed that vigilance and anxiety for the public interest which they had a right to expect of him, and that his conduct had not been such as to satisfy the country or to justify his continuance in office, because he had been so lukewarm careless and supine in not preventing the corruption which was going on around orruption which was going on around im." These transactions are commonly called the 'Edmunds scandal.' Their details are complicated; the circumstances are such as no Englishmen can read with pleasure, and yet there is a kind of consolation in the fact that so much was made of them at the time, and that the persons concerned were so seriously visited.
