Children Cry for CASTORIA:

Gladatone was a born debater, at least his training in the oratorical art began almost with the cradle. His fluency in argumentation and the trouble he took to convince people of things which often did not seem worthy a dispute, was due largely perhaps to inherited characteristics and the education derived from his father, who was himself an indomitable follower of the pleasures of disputation.

controversies, not as a mere matter for casual remark, but as an opportunity for a delightful argumentative "set-to."

One day, for instance, Gladstone's brother knocked down a wasp that was exciting the fears of the company in the drawing room, with his handkerchief and was about to crush with his handkerchief and was about to crush with his handkerchief and was about to crush the insect on the table, when his lather raised the question, in true parliamentary style, as to whether he had the right to take the creature's life. A serious argument was started on this point, on which Gladstone and other juvenile debaters were heard. In order, the helm facility point, on which Gladstone and other juvenile debaters were heard, in order, it being finally decided that the wasp deserved death, "because he was a trespasser in the drawing room and a common enemy and a danger there."

On another occasion, as showing that Gladstone early won a distinguished place as an "orator of persuasion," it is said that he and his elster Mary disputed as to where a certain picture ought to be hung. An old Scotch servant came is with the ladder and sat irresolute, while the argument progressed. As Miss Mary would not yield, William gallantly cassed from speech, though unconvinced, of course. The servant then hung up the picture where the young lady ordered, but when he had done this, he crossed the room and hammered a nail into the opposite wall, eay-leg, when seked why he did this: "Awell, Miss, that'il do to hang the picture on when ye'll have come round to Master Willie's openion."

are a few samples of this verse:—

"Shade of him, whose valiant tongue,
On high the song of freedom sung
"Ohade of him whose mighty soul,
Would pay no taxes in his roll,
Though swift as lightning civic sword,
Descended on thy tated head,
The blood of England's boldest poured,
And numbered Tyler with the dead."

Stanza II. reads:—

"Still may thy spirit flap its wings,
At midnight o'er the couch of kings,
And peer and prelate tremble, too,
in dread of mighty interview,
With patriot gesture of commanded,
With eyes, that like the forges gleam,
Lest Tyler's voice and Tyler's hand,
Be heard and seen in mighty dream."

with the cradle. His flasney in argumentation and the trouble he took to convince people of things which often did not seem worthy a dispute, was due largely perhaps to inherited characteristics and the education derived from his father, who was himself an indomitable follower of the pleasures of discipline.

Mr. John Gladstone laid it down as a principle in household conversation and teatable talk that his children abould exercise their judgment by stating the "why" and "wherefore" of every opinion they offered. The children and their parents argued upon everything. They would even debate as to whether the "trout" for dianer should be opened; and whether it was likely to be fine or wet next day, engaging in these domestic controversice, not as a mere matter for casual remark, but as an opportunity for a delightful argumentative "mat. to."

study, merely to acquire a perfect mental discipline, "

At Oxford his fluency in argumentation began to attract especial notice, and his growing knowledge of public affairs won for him a genuine reputation. In the swell political debating clip there, he won many triumphs, and the brilliant assemblies which they called together, came to be known as "The assem. blies of the Weg." so-called from the initials of Gladstone's speeches there delivered on the Reform Bill, was so trenchant and convincing that it was said to have excelled any of the speeches delivered in the House of Commons or the House of Lords, on that subject.

At College, Gladstone exhibited that splendid moral discipline which characterized his whole life. Whilst ready to indulge in the pleasures of sociability, his self-command was always apparent, and but very little wine was drunk at the parties which he gathered about him. After his guests had dispersed he was always ready to return to his beloved books and the enjoyments of his study. INHERENT LOVE OF DEBATE

Gladstone's father, who, of course, was a realous disputant himself, was not unwilling to give credit to any signs of excellence in this respect in his son. "Hear, hear, well said; well put, Willie," he would exclaim if the young debater bore himself well in the encounter. Thus, in the mind of the young Demosthenes, were inculcated those seeds of cresterical power, destined to blossom so resplendently, in his maturer years.

This inherent loye for argument fostered in his home life, by a father, who was himself much given to the delights of controversy, showed itself sufficiently in young Gladstone's shool days, to form one of the characteristics of the how. It has heen remarked that the county of Viotoris were held here on Wednesday, 25th inst. Chief Justice of the how. The delight well be a worthy one, We must remember, however, that Peterborough holds the big O.W.A. meet on that day. In face of that fact, knowing that the msjority of our bicyclists (and they are many) together with very many other citizens and also hundreds of farmers from the district, will be in Peterborough on that day. I think that it is safe betting that a celebration in Lindsay on that day would be a faiture. Out of justice to cur sister town—and ourselves, let us wait till a more opportune time for holding a celebration, and then when the time does come we will work with a will. Yours etc.

Gladstone, instead of hanging down his heed and offering himself lambility, to what spynerally appeared to him as an unjust punishment, immediately raised a question for debate, on the around that the master was basing his solition on the ground of 'breach of trust.'

It was a very carefully written paper, just such as one would expect from a man of Mr. Willison's stamp. The distinguished editor holds very high opinions as to the mission of journalism and sets up high ideals for journalists. He holds decidedly help the page for future Canadian journalism. bright hopes for future Canadian journalism, He touched on the origin and history of Canadian journalism, gave some statistics as to the labor employed, capital invested; the editorial page, doctrines of editorial infallibility and responsibility, independent journalism, the state of Canadian journalism and the need for a pure and incorruptable press. In the discussion which followed Mr. Willison was perhaps at his best and snawered readily the many thoughtful questions with which he was plied. In the course of his remarks he gave quite an insight into the metropolitan newspaper and newspaper making. The discussion was a purely impersonal one. A hearty vote of thanks, moved by Mr. R. J.
