My Little Sweetheart.

When early sunshine brightly gleams, The sky is blue and smiling along the street, Down the road my little sweetheart goes, And we, each morn, at the same corner meet.

And oh, for all the world, I find it in the long day's comfort that I find in this. Sometimes her step is quickened when she sees me from the distance hastening apace, Sometimes her glance seem folded to me...

Sometimes they meet my own, with friendly grace, Sometimes she blushes, but through all discreet. She never smiles, though oft my eyes entreat.

Onward she hurries with the hurrying throng; I, too, go onward by another way, Wondering if her sweet maiden thoughts belong.

My little sweetheart, whose dear name, alas, I know not—neither how she lives nor where. Nor to what toll her light feet daily pass; I only know that she is good and fair, And that the sad old world's a better place, And Heaven is nearer since I've seen her face.
