DEATH OF A SOLDIER. -Edward George Ponton, late adjutant of the Midland battalion in the Northwest rebellion, died in Belleville last week. From the beginning of the cam-paign to the end he literally worked day and night, and it is to the exposure and hardship then suffered that his subsequent long continued illness is mainly contributed to, his constant attention to the wants of the men, and by his kind instruction to the noncommissioned officers of the battalion, he endeared himself to all, and while maintaining the strictest discipline he continually devised means to keep up the spirits of the men in the long march, in the three nights' bivouac before Batoche and in the trip on the Saskatchewan, securing comforts and composing songs, one of which especially, "Charging on the Rifle Pits," often lustily sung by the whole brigade, will be remembered by all. His splendidly trained horse and dog, which followed him throughout the campaign, were the pets of the regiment.

"I have to laugh at the queer ideas some people have about pencils," said a manufacturer. "You will scarcely believe it, but the opinions of people who part that goes into our pencils other than the lead is cedar, and comes from the swamps of Florida. It is obtained from the fallen trees that lie there. There are men there who make a business of supplying to pencil manufacturers this cedar in blocks which are sawed to the length of the pencil, some thick, to receive the lead, and others thin, for the piece that is glued over the other containing the lead. The blocks are sawed for four pencils each. The groove is made by a saw, and in this the lead and the Busy Bee. Two months hence an occasional messenger will float away from the glistening clouds about the open milkweed pods, but who ever thanks the bees of June for them? The flower is but a bright anticipation—an expression of thope in the being of the parent plant. It has but one mission. All its fragrance, all its nectar, all its beauty of form and hue, are but means toward the consummation of the eternal edict of creation—"Increase and multiply." To that end we owe all the infinite forms, designs, tints, decorations, perfumes, mechanisms and other seemingly inchanged in the seemingly increased in the seemingly in the se licable attributes. Its threshold must bear its own peculiar welcome to its insect, or perhaps to its humming-bird friend, or counterpart; its nectaries must both tempt and reward his coming, and its petals assist his comfortable tarry-

CAUSE AND EFFECT. The Relations of the Fleecy Milkweed

Next to the floral orchids, the mechanism of our milkweed blossom is perhaps the most complex and remarkable, and illustrates as perfectly as any of the orchid examples given in Darwin's noble work the absolute divine intention of the dependence of a plant species upon the visits of an insect.

Our milkweed flower is a deeply planned contrivance to insure such an end.

It fills the zir with entiring fragrance. Its nectaries are stored with sweets, and I fancy each opening bud keenly alert with conscious solicitude for its affinity. Though many other flowers manage imperfectly to perpetuate their kind in the default of insect intervention, the milk-weed, like most of the orchids, is helpless and incapable of such resource. Inclose this budded umbel in tarlatan gauze, and it will bloom days after its fellow-blooms have fallen, anticipating its consummation, but no pods will be seen upon this cluster. Electricity From Street Dirt. An economic and scientific experiment began in London when Lord Kelvin opened at Shoreditch the combined electricity and dust destruction works erected at a cost of about $750,000. The destructor cells are capable of burning 20,000 tons of ashbin refuse yearly, and the heat given out is sufficient for the electric light and power of the whole of Shoreditch, with a population of 124,000 besides supplying heat to the adjoining bath and wash houses.

In Paris lamps will be lighted for the first time on Monday by electricity furnished by a destructor.

The unique municipal enterprise is exciting the liveliest interest in scientific and municipal circles in Great Britain and abroad. If successful, it promises to revolutionize the public supply of elec-tricity, as the vestry of Shoreditch promises to supply electricity at twopence (4 cents) per unit in the day time and at fourpence (8 cents) per unit at night

During a preliminary test 150 pounds pressure of steam was raised in the beilers from dust alone, absolutely no coal being used.—Industrial World.

The experiments being conducted in The experiments being conducted in land with pipes made of paper are attracting universal attention. The material used is cellulose paper, soaked in asphalt. The pipes are said to be impermeable, capable of resisting heavy pressure, not subject to the ordinary deterioration, and not affected by the netion of electric currents. If the continued use shall confirm the expectations warminted by the practical tests, it is rechable that the underground pipe makprobable that the underground pipe making industry will be revolutionized, pro-viding the cost of manufacture does not of animals has been recognized.
