A Famous Battle.

Among the many attractions to visitors at the Ontario Capital, is the wonderful, realistic panoramic view of the "Battle of Sodan," exhibited in an immense structure expressly erected for the purpose, immediately adjoining and west of the Walker House, at the corner of Front and Fork streets. As a work of art it is verily a picture true to life, and presents an illusion so complete as to translate the speciator at once to the veritable scene of the mightly struggle of two contends in a fascage which woulded for two contends in fascage which woulded for the fast the fascage which would be a fast two fast two contends in fascage which would be a fast to fast the fast the fast the fast that the fast the fast that the fast that the fast the fast the fast that the fast that the fast the fast that the fast that the fast the fast that the fast the fast that the fast that the fast that the fast the fast that the fast the fast that the fast the fast that Among the many attractions to visitors at work of art it is verily a picture true to life, and presents an illusion so complete as to translate the spectator at once to the veritable scene of the mightly struggle of two contending forces, which resulted in the complete discomalive of the French strue, and drove Napoleon III. from the throne of France. The convas on which this thrilling battle scene is presented in 50 test from top to bottom and over 450 feet in length. It is suspended around a circular area, in the centre of which visitors stand on an elevated platform, roofed in; and so perfect and true to life has the artist performed his work, that the eye is at once certical all around the scene of vision, over miles of landscape in every direction, covering valley and mountainous assence, surfeded along the bands at intervals with antique villages and towns. Within the range presented to view was waged, by two mighty hosis from daylight till dark with aword, musked, cannon cand the torch, a most terrificand determined struggle, until the blood of 50,000 men baptized the scene of carrage. do something to save our young men ? We de something to save our young men? We answer certainly. Nothing can be more reasonable, than that we should do all that is in our power, which we have a right to do, to save them from such vices they may be naturally inclined to, or into which they may be incidentally led. To this, every man with sense and feeling will fully assent, and when reasonable measures are proposed, there is no doubt but they will be sustained by public opinion. We should in the first place by precept and example make our young men feet that it is a disgrace to become intexicated, even in a slight degree and that they have lost easte by such a display of weakness. That the respectability of their characters will wholly depend upon the way they build them up; and that by imposing such restraint upon their passions and appetites as will show in all they sav and do, that they have a proper consideration for all that concerns them, as well as a regard for the opinions of others, that the responsibility wholly rests upon themselves; that they have no right, nor is there any reason they should blame others for the poverty, degradation, and misery that is sure; answer certainly. Nothing can be more any reason they should blame others for the poverty, degradation, and misery that is sure, sooner or later, to follow intemperance, idleness, or any other licentious course; that any deviation from the path of moral rectifude, which has prevented them from keeping even in the race, must be charged to their own folly. That this is a duty every one must perform for himself, besides which he has no time to guard, and protect the interest of his neighbor. But if our young men are so unfortunately organized, that they cannot be taught, and will not learn by observation and experience, so perverse they will not listen to

To the Editor of the Warder. DEAR SIR,—I will ask space to reply in brief to Mr. Spence's letter of the 27th inst. I did not say that it was Mr. Spence that wrote the first letter to THE WARDER, but wrote the first letter to THE WARDER, but some one did it, and if the writer had so much interest in Mr. Spence, why not take the blame on himself and give his name. If he did not write it, why not say so, and not give a challenge and a list of abuses. He must have forgotten some of the statements he made in his so-called first letter when he wrote his last. In his first he said he says he his own judgment; in the second he says he considered a certain lot was too low. Now if he was using his own jud, ment would he not have raised it, and it my statements were not true, how did he knew where to refer to? He trys to get around it by saying the owner told him he got reduced at the Court of Revision. Neither did the owner appeal nor ask to get reduced in my time, in the council. He also tries to bring in Mr. Grandy as a cloak, but Mr. Grandy kvew nothing about it whatever; to rereen Mr. Spence, I got him to enter and the roll the morning of the Court of Revision, and the owner is prepared to prove that he was not assessed, and still he pretends to know nothing about it; and he says he is prepared to swear that his state-ments are all true. Now air I think the least I have to do with a man with such a memory as Mr. Spence has got, the b-tter, and I think if Mr. Spence had been more guarded in some of his language it would have been more to his credit, and I will leave it with the readers to judge for themselves, where the falsehoods or vile slandering was used. Thanking you for your valued space.

that it was rail, as it is showing and blowing to day in a very lively manner.

FLOODS.—The water never was known to be so high here before. Messrs Shrigley & Allen Dorset met with a very heavy loss on the night of the 13th, their dam being partly torn away and a new channel washed out through away and a new channel washed out through the mill yard, carrying away lumber, shingles, etc., and making a complete wreck of Mr. J. B. Shrightey's work shop and J. E. Allen's dwelling house, which was built close beside the lumber yard. Where it was once dry land is now a deep, swiftly flawing river. So much for lumbermen's reservoirs and dam built on the the river and lakes through this part of the country. High water is becoming part of the country. High water is becoming a nuisance, and trying the patience of a good many this Spring. Mesers J. S. Tenn & Co.'s store and dweiling house at Durset is nearly surrounded by water. NAVIGATION — Navigation has opened up once more, and Mr. Marsh's two fine steamers are busy towing logs and carrying passengers and freight to and from Dorset, Dwight, Baysville, and other Porte on Trading lake.
