Estationarius a Smiridae peenling feature of discipline in the French army is shown by this regimental order issued by the colonel of the Seventieth, after the snicide of a privater "Private Richer, who was admitted to the class for the band musicians, after having tried to poison himself this morning, shot himself, because he was jealous of a woman of loose character. The colonel feels it a duty to condemn this act, which, if it did not arise from madness, would prove cowardice. A man, and especially a man who has the honor to belong to the French army, should know better how to support the ills of life, and to spare his blood for the service of his country. The coloner, therefore, orders that no soldier is to attend Private Richar's funeral. "Low tenderal"

His Cost Was Rather Sticky, Not every one that glances through the plate glass windows of Clark street knows the vateries of ready made clothing. A couple of weeks ago a night police reporter bought himself a neaf suit of gray clothes. It fitted him perfectly, and had the additional merit of being marked at a reasonable figure. The other night the reporter on his rounds was cought out in a drenching rain, and as he didn't happen to have his rather cost slong with him his new gray suit was thoroughly sonked. By the time he are red at the Central police station, however, his garments were partially dried, and he concluded to remove his cont and hang it before the steam heater to hasten the process. It just took enught somewhere in the sleeves and about the shoulders. Recognizing the deficacy of the operation he called for assistance and the cont was peeled off. Peeled is the correet word, for the lining, in great black patches, stuck to him like the paper on a wall. Then it was that the reporter discov ered the mystery connected with the architecture of his neat gray suit. The lining was not sewed in at all. It was glued. Chicago Herald.
