ham, and uniting a few miles south-west of Omemee. The river flows north-easterly to Pigeon lake, and is navigable up to Omemee.

In 1816 a large number of north of Ireland loyal yeomany with their families, settled and established the village of Omemee. Among the toremost of these hardy settlers was Mr. Morris Cottingham. His family then consisted of his wife and two sons. He built the first house in Victoria county, where the methodist church in Omemse now stands. Beneath the shadow of the lofty spire of that beautiful edifice, marked by a weather-worn and crumbling tombstone the dust of Morris Cottingham has rested for more than half a pleasant story is told of the early days. In 1826 the first church, anglican, was built, but before that date Rev. Mr. Thomp-son, the pioneer clergyman of Cavan, conductson, the ploneer clergyman of Cavan, conducted divine service for many years. This reverend gentleman, father of Joseph Thompson Esq., reeve of Dalton, of David Thompson Esq., of Valentia, and of another son in Verulam, was one of themost accomplished scholars of thetime. He was especially skilled in classics, and his latin and greek lexicons and standard dent clergyman.

About that time the Cottinghams built fine flour and lumber mills, and conducted an extensive business until a few years ago.

In 1837 a large body of yeomanry under command of the late Christopher Knowson saw frontier service. Omemee and Emily loyalists have ever retained the patriotic spirit that fired their early angestors in Ireland.

During the next decade the grammar school was erected and Rev. Mr. Ewing began preaching in the Presbyterian church, where
