About the time they entered the woods the calling had ceased, and as the old cented man was quite dail of hearing he shahly did not hear those in search of him. About the same time two hunters were seen on their way home from the same woods, and as they could get no trace or indication of any person being still in the words, they thought are all good shots. as seemed quite probable it was those two hunters calling to one snother, and as night was coming on they gave up the search. On leaving home the deceased did not fell his family where he intended going, but had been speaking a day or two previous of going to Halfburton, and from there to Lindsay. Consequently, although, they felt somewhat uneasy concerning his absence, they did not go in search of him, naturally supposing he had taken the afore mentioned trip to Lindsay, until intelligence reached them of the calling heard on Monday, when his son went in search of him immediately. On giving the alarm the people of this sattlement furned out again and searched until he was tound by Mr. Howard Magnire on Thursday Nov. 1st.
