that can find no other unfortunate person to fool with.

One morning a few weeks ago Joel went to the barn to yoke a pair of very large unternate steers. The yoke was large and cumbrons and the bows were big, but he got the wooden loop over one steer's head and pinned him. With the next steer he had a wrestle, disping about in the treacherous yard in his affect to hold the animal by one horn and carry the heavy yoke end with his free arm. Finally, by an inexplicable mischance, either he yoked steer twisted the other bow overset's head and below his arms, or des Joel fill into it, he doesn't know which. A moment later a neighbor approaching the house beheld the unhappy hired man yoked up with the frantic steer, his wild red face protruding through the big ox bow, skipping and plunging at terrific speed down the road toward tim. Joel espied the neighbor, and at every amp he roared in sputtering tones:

"Head us off, — It head us off."

The neighbor succeeded in doing it, turning the team by dint of very active work into an angle of a stone wall. Then he nervously hopped around to the steer's head meaning to release the animal before Joel was quite killed. It was at this point that the hired man manifested the striking originality of his mind and his disgust at the neighbor's lack of gumption at the same time. He wiled:

"Here, you! what are ye up tot Never mind the steer; come round here and unyoke method in the steer; come round here and unyoke method." Special to New York mind the steer; come round here and unyoke method.
