proving of great service on the coast. Hartland Abbey, the seat of Colonel Stacley standing in a narrow vale, whose sides are profusely mantled with hanging woods, and formerly one of the richest in Devonshire, was founded by Githa, wife of Earl Godwin, in honor of St. Nectan. A herd of noble deer dot the park, through which a levely stream of water winds its silent course to the sea. The tourist may reach Hartland by the main road, following the line of tele-graph posts on the right. If at all clear, he will nave a magnificent view of the North Devon headlands, whilst far away at sea may be discerned the long dark outlines of the

The chairman having taken these votes, Mr. Foster appealed to the Inspector under section 32, of the "Public Schools Act." The Inspector after taking the evidence reserved his decision, and not only consulted the authorities but also got the ruling of the education department on the point. The result was, that he decided that these votes should not be taken, and that Mr. Foster was the trustee elect. There is no appeal from the Inspector's decisions, and the only thing for those who are disatisfied is to shide by it until

This report was adopted:—

(a) In the fall there should be two township, or group of townships conventions, one at Rinmount, one at Lindsay.

(b) For $1.25 from gentlemen, and $1 from lady teachers the association grants membership, the Educational Journal, and McLennan's Parabalogue ady teachers the association grants membership, the Educational Journal, and McLennan's Psychology.

(c) A teachers' reading circle should be formed for the study of standard professional works, McLennan's psychology to be the work this year. The committee shall meet in September to select what portions are to be studied, and to appoint persons to conduct these subjects in discussion.

As usual, the programme printed was an imposing looking affair, and as usual, nearly everyone had an excuse for not being prepared with his or her part.

Miss Caroline Boune, an unassuming young lady from South Verulam, was a noble example to the contrary. She agreed to prepare a paper and she carried out her agreement to the letter. It will appear next week in full, and will amply repay perusal.

Though having illness in his family, Mr. W. F. O'Boyle performed his part, showing how to teach arithmetic. He gave practical examples with a class.

useful points were brought out and explained; but too much time was lost in dwelling on what should be and what is familiar to every modern student of reading. Mr. Lewis made a mistake in underestimating the attainments of his audiences, and reminded them too often of what "none of them could be a standard or the standard of them too. them too often of what "none of them could do," and what he could. This culminated do," and what he could. This culminated on Friday in an interesting discussion or interrogation by Mr. Broderick on how to teach reading. The debate did not result adversely to Lindsay. During the discussion, which by the way became quite lively, Messrs. Lewis, Broderick, Orr and Fenton took active part. There is too much disposition on the part of teachers in convention and in schools to bow humbly and tamely to new fangled, often old fangled, ideas, of paid lecturers or inspectors. There ideas, of paid lecturers or inspectors. There is material in East Victoria teachers to make

The finance committee reported, recommending the payment of several accounts, that H. Miller be permitted to erect a frame house, to be veneered with brick, as asked in his petition; that T. McConnell be permitted to erect a frame shed, it to be covered with

The committee on town property reported that there be expended for repairs of side-walks in the north ward $359.56, south ward $282.80, east ward $319.50, and that the sum of $1500 be placed at the disposal of the committee for general purposes unenumerated.

This report gave rise to some discussion of their conventions interesting, lively and instructive. The incident of Friday should serve as example for every subject for the future. Indeed, scarcely any discussion was aroused on a single subject, and only a few, Messis. Fenton, Armour, Knight, Broderick, O Boyle, O'Brien, Orr, Harstone and Allen joined in asking questions or making suggestions.
