Morw acton is known ecclesia-tically as the place of St. Norwenna,—the church which takes its name from that saint, being one of the most interesting of the kind in the country. It stands facing the sew on a bold cliff, and we could see it a long distance along our route. It has a Norman porch on its south side, which with three of the arches on the north side are said to be the remains of St. Morwenna's church built in 875. The interesting of tont in the church cannot be less than most of the Cornish churches carved at the ends, and the handsome acreen is of perpendicular date. There are also some interesting monuments belonging to ancient families of the parish. Just under the church is the vicarage, a quaint, romantic dooking place, for 87 years the residence of the vicar, the late Rev. R. S. kind in the country. It stands facing the residence of the vicar, the late Roy, R. S. Hawker, the author of some beautiful Cornish bailade, embodying many of the strange legends of the coast. Special to The Warder. THERE is quite an improvement made in the road leading down to Capt. Ball's wharf. All the patent gates are taken off and new ones put on, with a beautiful mennike road down to his place. Also the sand nill, better known as "hard-toget-up," has been brought down and gravelled with such as we have, the latter done by our worthy councillor, Mr. Fallie; overseer, Capt. Ball. Such improvements in road making will no doubt enties his friends to some for a sail in the little Express. Our road work just completed with only 36 days of statue labor. The men-worked well. We must say it is a credit to our best to have such men. Even our old neighbor Mr. Bartlett.
