What is thought? This is one of the mysterious questions of psychology. It is certainly not no present in the power of human science to solve it. But science can grasp secmena, enabling it to establish a correlation between certain manifestations of physical activity and other manifestations sessible to our means of investigation.

From the point of view M. de Parchanoff, professor of the Academy of Medicine of Ste Petersones, has brought to light a curious funtisting Old Corn Pearl. Following the example of the late "Cors-

Pearl," a retired Delilah of fifty seven win-ters, who had to appear in the Paris Police Court, had intended to publish her memoirs. They were to be issued, however, in a novel; but the literary project has been nipped in the bud. The frail and aged female had for several years been the friend of a wealthy Parisian, who at one time had sent her letters of a rather gushing character, and these the retired courtesan threatened to incorporate in her autobiographical novel unless a certain sum of money were paid down. Her former admirer, who was about to effect an advantageous matrimonial alliance, and whose prospects of wedlock would be damaged by the publication of the amorous epistles, accordingly paid some of the money asked, and no more was heard of the Circo until lately, when she resumed her blackmailing operations and importuned her victim to buy his letters from her, as well as a portrait of himself which he had given her with a dedication in verse. The sum demanded was £1,000. In court the ancient lady told the magistrate that she had in-tended to hand the money over to a charitable institution, as she had mended her ways and was making her peace with Paradise, but Monsieur le President on hearing this merely muttered the word baliverne! or "Bosh!" and sentenced the prisoner to sight months' imprisonment and a fine for her blackmailing propensities.

His year's confinement has made an improvement in him, both in his physique and mind, but his frank, boyleb face and general appearance of a child make him, in connection with his horrible crime, the attraction for all visitors to the penitentiary. He had nover heard of God nor had any knowledge of the nature of his crime, and would say in answer to the question as to why he killed his sister: "Well, my stepfather said he'd give me a pair of boots if I did it." He said in reply to further interrogatories. "She was walking across the floor when we were alone one day and I hit her on the head with a piece of stove iron. She fell in the fire and I hit her again and threw her in the creek."

Repeated efforts to elicit the details Repeated efforts to elicit the details brought to light the ignorant innocence of the boy in the subsequent discovery of finding the body. When the mother and the neighbors found the beby in the branch, Linnville ran to the scene and said: 'Let me fetch her out; I threw her in there.' He brought her to the shore and ingenuously related the circumstances of the murder, upon which he was placed under arrest and on his own confession given a life sentence, As there was no testimony to corroborate the instigation of the crime by any one, of course it would have been impossible to convict the stepfather. It is unfortunate, however, that such a child-ish convict should be compelled for want of a State reformatory institution to dwell for life among the old and hardened criminals of the State penicuritary. John Bull, having learned that a 1,000 foot tower on the shores of the Seine pays 20 per cent, on the investment, sees no good reason cent, on the investment, sees no good reason why a 1,500 foot tower on the banks of the Thames may not declare 25 per cent, dividends. So he has arranged to put up a cloud piercing structure that, compared with the billet tower, shall be as a flute to a piecelo. It is high time for Uncle Sam to be moving in the tower business, and not to rest content upon a monolith that must be as a pigmy when England's tower is finished. A tower for the World's fair of 1893, tall enough to knock chips off the moon, must be built in this republic, or other nations will laugh us to scoru. And if the tower is to be of from and steel, which seems inevitable, there is a and steel, which seems inevitable, there is a city at the head of the Ohio that can turn out the material.—Pittsburg Bulletin.
