

My Childhood's Home.

The sweet birds sing and the rivulet runs
The windows are low, and the thatch is low,
And the stone water spout is
Oh I love it— I love it— where I go
That old home far away.

How to Breed Them.
However entertaining the canary may be as a songster, and whatever amusement can be derived from its sweetest of pets as he sings in numberless quaint little ways his appreciation of what is done for him, there is no time to be lost which can be seen to such advantage as when he is the proud and conscious father of a family.

It is not natural that the bird be confined in a tiny cage, kept as a pet simply for the amusement of the eye, and the pleasure of the ear. He will be happy and contented, and will sing more freely, and will be more easily tamed, while he fully repays you, if you give him the delicate claw of some dainty little feathered miss in marriage.

This is no love-making any sweeter or more tender than that between a silver-voiced bird and his dainty little mate; she is as coy and coquetish as any maiden, encouraging him just enough to cause him to plead all his love, and to sing to her with his liquid music, until at last she consents to the betrothal kiss, and the open beak and fluttering wings tell that they are mated without a thought of possible application to the divorce courts.

The person who although fond of birds, has never seen them in their love-making, and house-keeping, can have no idea how much that is human in the bird life. One pair of birds, the male of the French and the female of the German species, have afforded the greatest possible amusement to the writer during their married life. They have not been separated for more than four years, and he is quite as attentive now as during the honeymoon, always perching as close by her side as night, or on the edge of the nest when she is engaged in family duties. Each day when she is sitting, he flies to the upper perch, and for nearly an hour sings to her, and to her alone, in time drags, periods when he is deprived of her companionship for two weeks; and then it has happened several times that, going to a lower perch, he sang to a female in the next cage. On each of these occasions his wife has shown actual jealousy, and has been whipping him unmercifully, although she is not quite half as large as he is.

In Germany, where bird-raising is a thing of profit rather than amusement, the birds are given the liberty of a room, around which their nests are hung, and will begin to build another nest before the first brood can fly, and perches are placed at all heights, care being taken to have some only a few inches from the floor for the young. In the rooms for each male, and then no trouble is had to provide them with food and water, removing the young as soon as they are able to care for themselves.

CHAT ABOUT ROYALTY

Nothing so marks the distinction between a woman of refined taste and habits and one of a coarser habit and more slovenly nature as the appearance of their bed-rooms. The room of a woman of fine breeding and good taste, who has had the best of her education, and who has had the best of her life, will be found to be a room of refinement and good taste, and who has had the best of her life, will be found to be a room of refinement and good taste.

Refinement of the Bed-Room.

How to Live Long.
We have, to a great extent, the power of prolonging our lives. Living by rule, and obeying nature's simple laws, may seem very trite to people as first, but when you have become a habit, and a blessed habit, and one that tends to happiness, to comfort and to length of days.

Chinese Pirates.
The two great points of importance of tame tigers is their feeding and their training. The tigris, as a rule, is a very voracious animal, and it is necessary to feed it on a regular basis, and to train it to be obedient to the commands of its keeper.
