With the exception of his own father, no one in the neighborhood but myself was aware of his existence. Nor did I, again, know much about him, for his father had only twice casually mentioned him to me, though we were on very would have gone, if I had but known. I friendly terms, together.

In fact, he had almost entirely tell why. slipped out of my mind, for with a large seaside parish on my hands, of which I was curate, my time and attention were fully taken up with matters nearer home. I mention this lest in the course of the following story my readers should chance to the front room, on a level with the area, think that a deep impression, previously into which its window opened. He had also made on my own mind, had predisposed me lain there till the Wednesday following, to see what I saw, and afterward to regard awaiting burial. His corpse was then lying it in a supernatural light. I can not, there- in that very room on that very Sunday, and fore, too emphatically repeat that I knew at the very moment, too, when I had seen next to nothing about James Henry Philips, his living likeness, as it were, in the area my friend's son ; that I had never seen him ; outside. Nobody, I found, had passed and seldom, if ever, thought of him at all.

The next thing I have to state is that had been locked and usused all the Sunday. when Philips married again, he gave uy his The very milkman, the only person who situation as coachman, and settled with his called, had come by the front steps to the wife in a street in my parish, called Dunton house ; and Philips and his wife were the

And here it is that the extraordinary part of my story begins. And yet, after happened in the full blaze of day, and so I all. I have no midnight horrors to relate; but only something very curious and strange, the tale itself is so extraordinary, and I and that happened, too, in the broad face know it to be so true, that its plain and bare of day.

It was a hot and bright afternoon in sum mer, and I was unrobing in the vestry after service in the church, when my parish clerk, a white-haired old man, with a merry, mischievous twinkle in his eye, ushered in a lady, desirous, as he meaningly said, of an interview with me in private. Her errand was this. She had heard that there was sickin the town, and for her children's sake (and they were legion) she wished to know if the report were true. If it were, for she was but a visitor, she would seek for lodgings elsewhere. I told her that I would make enquries, and let her know, it she would kindly leave with me her name and address. She gave me her name, which I have forgotten-let us say it was Mrs. Timidity- and her address was Dunton Street, a place already mentioned in this

Now in Dunton Street there lived at that time, among others,, three persons in particular: viz, my friend Philips; my new acquaintance Mrs. Timidity; and an old gaged that very afternoon to drink tea. Off these chaps tug at each other for the mastery. then I set, after service in church, like a boy let loose from school, for Mrs. Jackson's house in Dunton Street, which I very soon reached. As if it were only yesterday, I remember perfectly well walking down the broad, bright street in the broad, bright afternoon. And in going to Mrs. Jackson's abode, I had to pass the house of Philips. I remarked indeed that all his window-blinds were carefully drawn down, as if to screen the furniture, of which his wife was inordinately proud, from the despoiling blaze of the afternoon sun. I smiled inwardly at the under our observation elsewhere. The the side pavement, and looked over the area style is peculiar to Japan and appears to be rails, into the front court below. Why I did so, I can not exactly say. A young man, and apparently about twenty years of age, are sustained, while it can hardly be seen was standing at the door beneath the front steps. On the instant, from his likeness to my friend Philips, I seemed to recognize his son. We both stood and looked very hard at each other. Suddenly, however, he advanced to that part of the area which was immediately below where I was standing, fixed on me a wide, dilated, winkless sort of stare, and halted. The desire to speak was evidently legible in his face, though nothing audible escaped from his lips. But his eyes spoke; every feature in his countenance spoke ;-spoke as it were a silent language, in which reproach and pain seemed equally intermingled. At first I was startled : then I began to feel angry. "Why," I said to myself, "does he look at me in that manner?" At last, annoyance prevailing over my surprise, I turned away with the halfmuttered thought: "He certainly knows me by sight as a friend of his father, and yet has not the civility to salute me. I will call on the first opportunity and ask his reason for such behaviour." I then pursued my way to Mrs. Jackson's house, and thought no more of what had just occurred. On the next day, Monday, true to my appointment, I called on Mrs. Timidity in Dunton Street, and relieved her mind of all unnecessary fears. On my way home, however, finding myself thus inadvertently in the neighborhood of Philips' house, and feeling certain in my own mind that it was I'hilips' son I had seen, Idetermined to call on him at once. MARNER'S WAR

FOR THE KIDNEYS, LIVER AND URINARY ORGANS

THE BEST BLOOD PURIFIER. There is only one way by which any disease can be cured, and that is by removing the cause—wherever it may be. The great medical authorities of the day declare that nearly every disease is caused by deranged kidneys or liver. To restore these therefore is the only way by which bealth can be secured. Here is where WARNER'S SAFE OURE has achieved its great reputation. It acts directly upon the kidneys and liver and by placing them in a healthy condition drives disease and pain from the system. For all Kidney, Liver and Urinary troubles; for the distressing disorders of women; for Malaria, and physical troubles generally, this great remedy has no equal.
