Philip Hart, a notion dealer in Trenton, N. J., has been missing since last Thursday. He left for New York on that morning, and has not returned. His wife tells a singular story, writes a correspondent of the New York Times. She says her husband was in the habit of going to New York every month to pay bills for goods and to order new lots. He always stopped at the house mained there until two o'clock in the afternoon. It was his intention then to go and last seen of/him. He had a sister living in Seventy-seventh street, whom he intended to visit, and as he did not come back to his cluded that he had staid at her house. Next

Mrs. Hart described her dream in a vivid manner. She said she had no uneasiness about her husband's going away when he left, as he had been in the habit for the past three or four years of goding to New York every month. But on dollars will have been lost. Better spend a good deal of money in forest rangers and so forth, than have such a state of things perpetuated.

We have seldom seen or heard of a meaner trick than that which has been going the rounds, about a so-called lawyer by the name of Warmoll getting $10 out of a poor drunk old man, on pretense that he was his lawyer and had helped him out of trouble. In greater suspense than ever she sent back a telegram that he had not, and at once started for New York. When she arrived at his parents' house, the sister of the missing man without knowing anything about Mrs. Hart's dream, related her own dream. When she had finished and Mrs. Hart told her dream both were astounded, the dreams were almost identical, even to the railing on the bridge.
