A School for Thieves.

A strange case has just been devel oped in London, England, recalling Dickens's description of Fagin's school for thieves. Bertha Dennis, a young woman twenty-two years old, after : mysterious disappearance of two months, returns home with an extraordinary story that she was drugged by a woman in a railroad train, taken to a garret in a miserable house, where she knows not. The woman deprived her of her clothing, and detained her a prisoner there for ten weeks, and then led her away blindfolded and allowed her to escape. She walked home in a destitute condition, looking ten years older than when she disappeared. The statement seems almost incredible, but she says that the house where she was detained is a headdisguised by wigs and paint, to depredate.
