

Tortured and Robbed by Desperadoes.

BUTLER, Pa., April 9.—Lewis Patterson, a wealthy farmer living near Centerville, was robbed last night by three masked men. There was nobody in the house with him but his mother, aged 80. The men burst in the door. Patterson felled one with a poker. The others overpowered him, however, and dragging him barefooted to the barn threatened to hang him if he refused to tell where he kept his gold. They placed the rope around his neck, but as he persisted in saying he had no money they took him back to the house and burned his feet and face at the fire. They then searched the house, and after securing $43 and Patterson's gold watch departed, declaring that if he moved before half an hour he would be shot. There is no clue to the desperadoes.

A Ghastly Crime.

A man named Bury, hanged at Dundee recently for wife murder, left a written confession which should furnish material for Zola. Bury and his wife went from Dundee to London, spent the woman's fortune in drink, and found themselves on the verge of starvation. The woman proposed to earn money by immoral means, which so upset the finely strung nerves of her husband that in a frenzy of rage he strangled her. Then he spent his last shilling in whisky, went to bed drunk, and passed the night within a few feet of the corpse. He awoke sober, to meet the glassy glare of his murdered wife's eyes. Bury, in an excess of maddened fear, seized a big knife and slashed and hacked at the corpse for hours. When at last he recovered, his self-possession he proceeded more methodically to work, the idea being to dismember the body and throw the remains piecemeal into the river. But he soon became deadly sick, lost his nerve, and was unable to finish the ghastly task. Finally he wedged the mutilated remains into a big trunk, and night after night for a whole week sat up with the fearsome fiends with which his terrified imagination peopled the room. At the end of the week he surrendered to the police.

Cockroaches in a Baby's Stomach.

HAMILTON, May 12.—The Evening Times is responsible for the following strange story:

William Amos, proprietor of the St. James hotel, on Hughson street, on Friday went up to his dinner about half past twelve o'clock, and Mrs. Amos went down stairs to mind the bar-room. Meantime their little infant (five weeks old) was left lying in an upper bed-room. When Mrs. Amos returned to the upstairs apartment she heard the baby crying and at once took it up in her arms. She noticed that it was deadly pale and was gasping for breath. In a moment the frightened mother saw a large cockroach in the child's mouth, which she pulled out. After nursing for a second or two the infant's stomach turned, and the vomiting brought up four other cockroaches, as big and ugly as the first. Two others came up in a little while, and the now thoroughly alarmed mother rushed off to consult Dr. Lafferty. That gentleman had never heard of such a case before. He said that the infant could not stand strong medicine, but he gave the mother a mild emetic to administer. This had the effect of bringing up another cockroach bigger and uglier than any of its predecessors. It was nearly an inch long and was caught by Mrs. Amos on the child's tongue. Every one of the insects was alive. Later in the afternoon two other cockroaches came up the little one's throat, one whole and the other in two parts.

A Shingle Mill Episode.

WYEBRIDGE, May 10.—On Wednesday afternoon, while Mr. Thomas Robins and his sons were engaged cutting shingles, the jointer burst, and striking the shingle saw caused it to fly in pieces. Part of the jointer wheel, weighing about fifty pounds, went through the roof of the mill and shot through the air a distance of five hundred yards before falling to the earth. Several other portions went through the side of the mill. A piece of the saw was found imbedded in a shingle block, and another piece in its flight upwards struck and cut its way through a piece of hemlock timber six by six and made its way out through the roof. All hands were at work at the time, but fortunately no one was hurt.

Hannah Battersby, the fat woman, was advertised as weighing 800 pounds. She was weighed after her death the other day, and the exact figures were 343 pounds.

"Amber beads, $1 a string, good for the croup," is the sign in a window of a jewellery store on Broadway, New York. It is believed to be the first incursion of the jeweller into the realm of medicine.

To Those Whom It May Concern.

I positively will refuse to carry any account of any one who does not square up last year's account in this month of February.

Men whose common sense ought to teach them that the storekeeper is entirely depending on them for the means to pay his own debts, are showing much culpable indifference whether they pay their accounts or not.

Thanking those who have squared up, and hoping for a continuance of their favors.

Respectfully,
JOSEPH HEARD.
