Original Poetry.

" In the Midst of Life we are in Death."

I walked a path at even calm, That through a wood-which softest balm Poured on me-winds its way secure Mid green o'erhanging foliage pure ; Attractions doth one's heart beguile And make the thirsty muse to smile, When wandering thro' the woods with joy, Where cares ne'er bind nor men annov, But where sweet nature's dreamy sense Doth make its beauty more intense; Where all is life-but let me stay, Life hath not all to guide and lead, For in the woods, ah, sad to say, Some trees are dead !

Sweet life that in all nature sings, With vigor clapping its bright wings, As o'er the earth with joy it flies, With glowing cheeks and beaming eyes, That never give dark sorrow's moans With drooping head and death-like tones; But ever blissful notes doth swell, And so life's tale of gladness tell, And seems to breathe immortal breath, Unchecked and unalloyed by death; We hear sweet life in glory sing,

We see its light of vigor shed; But gloomier thoughts from knowledge

Some things are dead !

Calm, peaceful joy of nature's life, Free from men's sins and selfish strife; Where birds with twittering innocence Give throbs of bliss without expense; Where life imbued with purity Gives to its source its surety; Where brooks and rivers gliding by Refresh the soul, delight the eye; For where life dwells and ever reigns There it is free from error's chains: Men by their acts do tell this tale-

When they the path of folly tread-It strikes from out my soul this wail, Some men are dead !

While I stand lingering in this dream That doth so fascinating seem, The sun sinks dimly in the west, And nature takes life on her breast; The shy stars peep out one by one In playful mockery of the sun, While, reddening, he in anger chide Their freaks, but they his wrath deride; And now he slowly sinks from sight, And sparkle now the gems of night; Night's queen with cooler beams adorn, And eve creeps on with silent tread;

So haste I home to sleep till morn, For day is dead!

COMMUNICATIONS.

To the Editor of the Fenelon Falls Gazette.

The female resident of Bond-street west, who, after attending a levee held by a couple of our J. P.'s in the town hall, paid a somewhat protracted visit to the county town, has for upwards of a month been back in her old quarters; and has already, in a way she well knows how, without leaving herself amenable to the law, made herself so obnoxious to the neighbourhood that two families have been obliged to move, and several others would follow if they could. The -, I was going to say gentleman, but that word might be out of place, who is her landlord, seemed anxious to impress upon all, at the time she took her departure, that he did not know what she was when he leased her the premises. He cannot plead such ignorance now. Must a whole village be polluted by such society in order that his income may be augmented by a paltry three or four dollars per month? Does he believe he has the right to outrage common decency by allowing such characters to remain his tenants? or has he entirely lost sight of the divine injunction about giving offence to thy neigh-

Mr. Samuel McGee disposed of a valuable young horse recently to Charlie Frenchman. We did not hear the price, but no doubt it was a good one, as Mr. McGee keeps no other kind.

Farm produce is cheap now, especially eggs at 7 cents per dozen; but groceries of every description are just the same price as when wheat was $1.25 per bushel, and everything else in proportion. The farmer has got to take it and not say a word.
