

A Night of Terror.

PASSENGERS ON A C. P. R. TRAIN THREAT-ENED BY A MADMAN.

OTTAWA, March 29.—A powerful Swede became insane on the Soo train due here at 9 yesterday and terrorized the passengers all night with a huge jack knife. Conductor Smith several times tried to pacify him, but without avail, and after reaching Renfrew a telegraph message was sent to Arnprior, ordering a constable to await the train and take the man into custody. Finally the man's pent up fury burst forth, and he declared in his ravings that he had been poisoned and he would kill any man who came near him. When Arnprior was reached a terrible struggle began. The conductor and brakeman armed themselves with heavy clubs; the constable, who is well up in years, approached the madman, ordering him to lay down the knife, but was gashed in the arm in two places, his wrist being nearly severed. Seeing further parley was useless, the conductor, raising his club, brought it down with terrible force on the maniac's head, with the result that his skull was laid open. This only seemed to stagger him for a second, and recovering himself he resumed the attack, when the brakeman, a powerful little fellow, sprang on him from behind, and assisted by the passengers, after a fearful struggle, overpowered him and bound him with ropes. It took six men to hold him when being conveyed to prison.

How Gladstone Spent the Week.

LONDON, March 27.—Mr. Gladstone's public occupations during the past seven days have included a lecture on Homer to the boys at Eton, embellished with interesting passages of autobiography, a journey to Hastings under the guidance of Mr. Harcourt, Sir William's son, a speech of an hour and a half at Hastings, attendance at two dinners given by Lord and Lady Aberdeen at their house at Grosvenor-square to meet him, a reception of the woman's deputation, sundry speeches in the House of Commons, and a long correspondence with the Chancellor of the Exchequer, embodying some corrections of errors in the Hastings speech, accompanied by a handsome apology for having made them. His health continues to be a political topic of the first importance. The truth appears to be that, when he has a considerable effort to make, like that at Hastings, he pulls himself together and speaks with much of his old vigor and animation. When this impulse, or inspiration, or perhaps stimulus of necessity is lacking, marked decrease of his former energy and vitality is perceptible.

Fatal Fight With a Bear.

PRINCE ALBERT, March 30.—Word has been received here from Devil's Lake of the death of an Indian hunter. It appears that the Indian and a younger brother got on the trail of a moose, which they followed till about dusk, when the man told the boy to proceed home, and he would follow the tracks a little further. As he failed to return, searching parties were formed. When found, the body was cold but not frozen, showing plainly that the poor fellow had died but a short time before. From indications surrounding the spot where the body was found, it appears he followed the track of the moose till he suddenly came on the nest of a bear, which must have attacked him, as his head, body and limbs were dreadfully lacerated by the ferocious animal. The Indian had fired a couple of shots at the bear, severely wounding him, judging from the marks of blood around the spot where a tussel for life took place. The bear must have dragged the man some distance, as the bloody trail showed plainly his track as he crawled back to the place where the body was found, and where he had managed to light a fire.
