A Maryland Snake Story.

I have read with much interest, writes a correspondent of the Chicago Inter-Ocean, the discussion about the joint snake, and propose to give my experience with it. I have been familiar with the "joint," or as we call it here, the "hook-and-eye" snake, since I was a boy. It is a snake of a brownish yellow color, and grows to be about three feet long, but at any stage of its growth it can be unjointed or unhooked. It is fastened together by a hook-and-eye arrangement, exactly like those used on ladies' dresses. On one occasion while out taking a walk I saw a joint snake crawling slowly along the top of an old stone wall; taking my cane I gave it a smart jerk about the middle of the body, and it immediately unhooked into about sixteen pieces, each about two inches long. Taking the head part and putting it into my hat for safe keeping, I gathered up the joints, and laying them along in a row in just the reverse order in which they came apart, with all the eyes in contact and also the hooks, I took the head part out of my hat, and laid it along side the middle of the row of joints. It immediately began to move along the line, and without a moment's hesitation backed up to the first joint, when a little snap was heard and the first joint was hooked on.
It repeated the process and in the course of 65 seconds by the watch was again a complete snake.

Again catching it, I took out the ninth joint and also the fourteenth, and changed places with them, putting the ninth in place of the fourteenth, and then let the snake go. He gave one or two wiggles, but finding there was something wrong, commenced examining his joints from head down, and when he came to the ninth took it out and laid it on one side, then crawling along the rest of his joints until he came to where the fourteenth ought to be, but where I had put the ninth, took that out and hooked it on to the eight, and then put the fourteenth back in its place, all of which was done in an incredibly small space of time. Again I separated him, mixing the joints up promiscuously, and hooking them together, having some difficulty in hooking the tail joint onto the head part, as the hook and eye did not set very well. Letting the snake loose, in 115 1/2 seconds he was again properly jointed and I let him go.

Mr. Spurgeon, the eminent preacher, is dying.

The penitentiary walls and several other buildings were blown down by a cyclone at Baton Rouge, La., Monday.
A number of convicts were killed and many people injured.

At a banquet in honor of Emperor William at Windsor Castle on Monday night a water-pipe burst and deluged the hall. Considerable excitement was caused by the incident.

During the exercises of the infantry near Weimar, Prussia on Friday and Saturday 40 men were sunstruck, four killed outright and nine paralysed.
The officers are severely blamed for exposing the troops needlessly to such danger.
