Is it Satisfactory?

The pessimistic spirit is, we think, as hateful to us as to the most sanguine of our readers, but we find it, nevertheless, quite impossible to be satisfied with the logic of a certain species of argument which is being made to do you-man duty on many platforms and in many newspaper articles. The object is to prove that Canadians ought to be reasonably content with their present circumstances because their people, the farmers for instance, are man for man at least as comfortably well off as their neighbors in the United States, which is beyond all question one of the most prosperous nations on the globe. Now we believe that the premises are correct, but we cannot accept the conclusion.
We see no reason to doubt that on the average there is as little destitution among us as among our neighbors, that in proportion to population the number of the unemployed may be as few with us as with them. But before we can be satisfied with this as an argument which should bring us content, we feel compelled to look into the circumstances of the two cases and see whether the conditions are such as to make the comparison just. Very much depends of course upon the point of view. What is a reasonable and right ambition for a young country situated as is our own, and possessing its admittedly vast resources? Ought it to be content with remaining virtually stationary with respect to population, so long as its five million or so of inhabitants are able to maintain themselves in tolerable comfort? Again, it is beyond all question that hundreds of thousands of Canadian citizens by birth or adoption have left the country and gone to the great Republic during the last few years. What would have been the present condition of the country had all these remained in it? Most of them left no doubt because of their inability to find remunerative employment at home. Ought a young country with magnificent resources to be content so long as it is unable to retain its own citizens and find room in addition for a goodly number of immigrants? Sir John Thompson said at Halifax that the country would never have a policy which would prevent our people leaving to try their fortune in other countries. Are we to understand that this magnificent Dominion, with its almost unlimited sources of wealth in soil, forest, mine and sea, is to be content if by natural increase and immigration combined she is able to accommodate a little more than counterbalance her emigration? Are we, in a word, to be content with a comfort and prosperity which result largely from the fact that we have at our doors a great nation, able and willing to receive and absorb the surplus and overflow of our population from year to year? Or is it not rather the part of true patriotism to cherish a determined discontent with our selves and our position so long as things are as they are, and to take no rest until the true cause or causes of such a state of things have been determined and the true remedy, for a remedy there surely must be, applied?—

Pretty Strong Talk.

A BAPTIST CLERGYMAN WHO HAS NO PARTICULAR RESPECT FOR SOLDIERS.

HALIFAX, Jan. 24.—Rev. Henry J.
Adams, pastor of the First Baptist church, has the courage of his convictions. He made a speech in a temperance meeting to-night which will set the city all agog when published to-morrow.
He declared that the army and navy were a curse to Halifax, and did more to injure the social life of the city than any other element. He denounced the British officers as parasites who enjoyed the hospitality of the citizens and then laughed at them. He had never known an officer who was a Christian. Even the garrison chaplains were not Christians. The officers corrupted the society women of Halifax, while the private soldiers corrupted the servant girls, and the effect was such that young citizens were compelled to go abroad for wives.
Mr. Adams' remarks created a big sensation among his hearers, a number of whom left the building as an expression of their indignation.

A powerful Arab paper of Cairo, hitherto opposed to England, now acknowledges the benefits resulting from the British occupation of Egypt.
The proclamation calling on Parliament for February 25 was issued on
