HOW THE CREW OF A PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND SCHOONER WERE SAVED FROM DEATH.

St. JOHN'S, Nfld.—The Prince Edward Island schooner Avengeur was driven on the rocks 20 miles from St. John's on Saturday in a blinding snow-storm. While the vessel was pounding to pieces the boat was launched and immediately swamped. Death stared the crew in the face. Capt. Rice called for a volunteer to swim to the shore with a life line. Murdoch Gillis responded. He was carried shoreward on the breast of an enormous wave, but the shore was composed of precipitous rocks, upon which in the tumult of the waves it was extremely difficult to effect a landing. There were in the sea a number of barrels of oil which had been swept from the vessel's deck and impeded and hindered the swimmer. Gillis could not obtain a hold upon any point on the shore, and was obliged to give it up. He was drawn back on board the vessel, where he rested for an hour. Then he tried again, this time being successful. Getting his hand in a hole in one of the rocks, he drew himself up, and by catching points of rock he succeeded in climbing to a spot on which he could fasten a line. Then he drew ashore a longer line, and by means of this the captain and crew all got safely to shore. Gillis had nothing on but his drawers, undershirt, socks and a pair of slippers. In this scanty clothing, fatless and shivering, he walked five miles to the nearest lighthouse, where he obtained more clothing, and the party proceeded to St. John's, having lost everything but their lives.

Our American friends are sometimes queerly ingenious. The latest idea is a traveller's pocket fire-escape which, consisting of a metallic tape constructed of aluminum and steel, obviates all danger of being destroyed by fire. The tape runs on a reel which is fastened to a web belt passing around the body under the arms. By means of a wood screw the tape is fastened to any object in a room or building. The reel is provided with a brake whereby the user can control the revolution of the reel and regulate the speed of his descent. There is also an automatic brake attachment which keeps any required tension on the reel, so that it is an impossibility to descend too rapidly. The device weighs but three pounds.
