Local vs. City Trade.

Many merchants in towns and villages feel very much chagrined and disappointed when they see their fellow townsmen sending daily to "the city" for dry goods and like necessities instead of patronising the men who are the mainstay of their town. It is exceedingly lamentable to see a conscientious, upright dry goods man in a small town doing his best to give the people in his vicinity a chance to inspect a full range of the season's novelties, and then when they have fully inspected his stock, got a general idea of what they ought to buy, they send for samples to "the city," and finally order from there.

We do not proclaim that "to the local victor belong the spoils," but we do maintain that the people of a town are following their own best interests when they patronize their home trade. Every store in a town pays a certain amount of rent, taxes, gas bills, etc., and the wages of employer and employees will amount to a snug sum every year. Another store occupied increases the price of real estate. Another store and one or two houses occupied means less taxes on other property. Another store occupied and competing for trade means an increased number of visitors, rural and civic, and an increased circulation of money in this and a dozen different ways. The merchants of a town are its backbone, and take them out of any town, and in three months it will be as dead as the proverbial "door nail." They are the sap of the town, and give it activity and life. One live merchant is worth ninety-nine retired farmers. They talk up the town; they draw manufacturers into it; they draw residents; they invest money in it; they help it in a thousand ways.

There is no legitimate method for causing the people to keep their money from the city stores except by an education of public opinion. Let each country merchant affected by this practice reproduce the sentiments expressed above in his local paper, and keep hitting the practice in this way, and most people will have either their patriotic feelings or their shame aroused, and the custom will be weakened. In discussing such matters with his customers a merchant must argue calmly and disinterestedly, and any show of anger or wrath will but arouse opposition. The cultivation of a proper esprit du corps in the community will do much to centre all trade in that community.—Canadian Dry Goods Review.

A Miraculous Escape.

MONTREAL, May 28.—A little child was the means of making the Canadian Pacific railway train from Quebec arrive in at Dalhousie station last evening one hour and a half late. The train left Quebec on time, and on board was a party of immigrants from the R. M. S. Nubidian, bound for the west. Just before Three Rivers was reached a little child belonging to one of the new arrivals en route for Winnipeg went into the water closet, and after some time had elapsed the mother went in search of her child, but to her dismay and horror the child was nowhere to be seen. The conductor was at once notified, and as after a thorough search the child could not be found, the train was put back in search, and after twenty miles of ground had been covered, to the surprise of the passengers and the delight of the mother, the little one was found sitting on the embankment as contented as if nothing had happened. How the child came where it was found is shrouded in mystery, but the theory is that the child, unable to open the door, jumped out of the window. As the train was going at the rate of 35 miles per hour the escape of the child from a horrible death was miraculous. Among the passengers on the train was His Honor Lieut.-Governor Chapleau and Sir Hector Langevin, the latter gentleman being on his way to Ottawa.

The Dominion W. C. T. U. convention opens in London on Friday next. Miss Imhoff, teacher in an Anglo-Japanese school at Yonewaza, preached against a native deity, and had her eyes gouged out by the infuriated worshippers. Mrs. Ada Dow Currier, who was the directress of the Julia Marlowe company and sued the theatrical manager, David Henderson, to recover damages of $50,000 for injuries she received at the Chicago opera house in 1887 by the fall of one of the scenes, recovered a verdict on May 26th for $18,000 in the Supreme Court.
