LIGHTNING'S WORK.—About 6.30 yesterday morning, during the storm that was then raging, a large barn near the centre of Mr. William Jordan's farm in Fenelon was totally destroyed by fire, together with twenty tons of hay stored therein. The property was not insured. Mr. Jordan's grain storehouse near the railway station in the village had a narrow escape, as a two-year-old roan heifer standing within a few feet of it was struck dead. The animal probably strayed in from the country, as the owner of it appears to be unknown.

The suits that R. Taggart makes are the best advertisement he can publish, and it is not necessary for him to tell you that he is cutting prices, as they have been already cut away down below anything that has ever been seen in this district. Furthermore, R. T. wishes to tell his customers and friends that any orders they may please to favor him with shall have his best and prompt attention, and that he employs nothing but the best mechanics.

A Letter from Chicago.

To the Editor of the Fenelon Falls Gazette.

While life in the United States is at all times more varied than it is in Canada, in cities like Chicago (and they are few) it constantly borders upon the sensational and is always interesting. Indeed, as a friend well known in the Falls recently remarked to me, life rolls away here before one is aware of it, and one is old before he suspects it. Young heads, too, are decked and flecked with the silver spray of life's breakers long before their time. It is a country where the young are prominent in every avenue of business, in all phases of life, in religion, law and government. The mayor of Chicago, with its million and a half of people, is a young, unmarried man who rose from the ranks and who presides over the city council of 68 aldermen with dignity and ability. "Give the boy a chance," seems to be the popular disposition. The whole country is now recovering from the shock occasioned by the "strike" at Pullman. In this strike 23 lines of railway entering Chicago were almost completely tied up, many lives were sacrificed, and hundreds of thousands of dollars in property destroyed by lawless men. President Cleveland hurried national troops to Chicago with characteristic vigor and stamped out the useless, illogical, dangerous insurrection. The one great menace to popular government is the demagogue, and this is his opportunity. The governor of Illinois rebuked the President for sending federal soldiers into a state when the state was able to take care of itself, and sought by lengthy public discussion to champion the cause of the dear laborers (for their votes). As a result of this, the strikers are unanimously denouncing Cleveland and lauding Albigeld. This same governor Albigeld is the only democratic governor Illinois has had since 1869, and it is charged that he was elected by sympathizers of the imprisoned anarchists, with the understanding that he should pardon the latter from prison. He gave them their liberty over a year ago. It is interesting to know that while all those anarchists but one are foreign born, foreigners had a large part in their prosecution. The state's attorney who prosecuted them is an Englishman, the sheriff who hanged six of them is a Norwegian, the judge who sentenced them is a hard-headed old Scotchman, who was re-elected recently by an increased majority as a rebuke to the governor, who, I may add, is a German. In 1890 the foreign-born population of Chicago numbered 450,666, of whom Germany contributed more than any other five countries, or 161,939. Canada was there 24,297 strong, England 28,337, while Ireland seconds the list with 70,928. China sends 584, Japan 7, France 2,502, a small number compared with others, as little Norway with 21,835. The numbers in full are interesting to economists. The city's population increases about 60,000 yearly, while its vote swings the state to one side or the other.

As 1896 draws nigh the men on the checker-board of politics show signs of life, and prophecies are made. It seems certain that unless there is a speedy return of "good times," the democrats will go down to certain defeat. While the hard conditions prevailing all over the country the past year can not be traced to the party in power, yet the universal disposition of man to attribute his hard lines to external causes will be exhibited as usual in November, 1896, unless prosperity returns meanwhile. But many causes make it difficult to foretell the results of that contest. In the last presidential election there were at least five distinct parties in the field, a fact which shows the unsettled condition of American politics. The old issues arising out of the war are dead or dying, and new ones demand attention. Legislation is demanded by the silver men, the labor ranks, the farmers of the west, and of course the manufacturers are always in the field with claims. But another question looms up, headed by unbending and unconquerable leaders—the prohibition question. In 1888 there were 157,000 votes cast by this party; in 1892 300,000; and the proposed union of this party and the People's party (already a fact in Virginia) promises to become a strong factor in the coming struggle.

Woman suffrage in all elections is complete in Colorado and Wyoming, and is a very live question among the politicians, since the women are expected to attack the saloon tooth and nail. The Wilson bill will surely become a law, and it is more favorable to Canada than existing laws, which is not saying much in its favor. McKinism is not quite dead in the country, though I cannot but think it will prove to be the high-water mark in tariff legislation for many years to come. The idea of a tariff commission, appointed by congress and composed of experts from all parties, to take up the whole question and settle it in view of the interests of manufacturer and consumer, thus taking the whole bugbear out of politics, is now engaging the minds of many who recall the fact that it has been a debateable plank in party platforms for a hundred years.
