A Historic Scene.

LONDON, Feb. 18.—(New York World cable.)—Mr. Gladstone maintains his strength. He usually leaves the house of commons about 7 o'clock, and does not return for the night session. This morning he waited in his seat until 1 o'clock in order to go through the form of introducing with his own hands, the home rule bill. It was a scene destined to become historic. When the debate ended and formal leave was given to introduce the bill, Mr. Gladstone rose from his place and went to the bar at the end of the house. At the same moment all the Gladstonians and the Irish members of both sections jumped up as one man, and as the venerable statesman advanced to the table with the bill in his hand to present it to the clerk, they greeted him with tremendous cheers, waving their hats above their heads. Mr. Balfour had left the house, but Mr. Chamberlain was still there and looked upon the significant enthusiasm with a twitching face. The members of the Irish party were in exceptional spirits, because earlier in the evening Edward Blake, the Canadian statesman, had shown by his reply to Mr. Chamberlain that he takes rank as one of the very ablest and most skilful debaters in the house. His speech was an instant and overwhelming success. Mr. Gladstone said afterwards that it was one of the very greatest debating speeches he had ever heard.

Lord R. Churchill's Reappearance.

The reappearance of Lord Randolph Churchill, after a silence of two years, was one of the principal features of the week. It was expected that his speech would justify the hopes of his followers that he would oust Mr. Balfour from the leadership of the opposition. Intellectually his speech was far abler than Mr. Balfour's. But physically the man is a wreck. His voice was so tremulous and weak that it was painful to listen to him. His hands trembled violently when he removed them from his sides. His face wore a deadly pallor, his eyes were leaden, and he had lost the
