The Ideal Husband.

Recently in one of the English monthlies—The Young Man—appeared an offer of a prize of books to the value of one guinea for the best postcard paragraph description of "The Ideal Husband," and the editor received hundreds of communications from lady readers in all parts of Great Britain. We quote first the paragraph that gained the prize, and then some of the best which approach nearest to it. It may be well for single young men, and even benefactors, to understand what the ladies expect of them. Perhaps old married people will gain something by a careful reading of the following paragraphs as well—"It's never too late to mend."

THE PRIZE PARAGRAPH.

My "Ideal Husband" is a manly Christian, strong and tender, brave and patient, intelligent and warm hearted, one to whom his wife can look up with reverence on account of his purity and nobility of character, in whom she may wholly confide, from whom she may receive sympathetic help in all the trials of life. He is not necessarily handsome, but bright, genial and healthy.

The following are some of the best contributions received on the subject:--

To My Faults a Little Blind.

A manly, happy-dispositioned individual, always inclined to look on the bright side of things, and to make the best of all worries and troubles. Gentlemanly in all the details of home life, tender and considerate to wife and children and courteous to all. A man who has the courage of his convictions, and is not ashamed to uphold them; and one whom other men look up to and respect. He is able to join in any manly sports, but he stands firm against such evils as betting and gambling. One who is to my "virtues ever kind," and to my "faults a little blind."

"AN EARNEST SEARCHER AFTER TRUTH."

My ideal husband is an intelligent, thoughtful, God-fearing man, whose chief aim in life is to do what is right and just. He is an earnest searcher after truth, and when convinced of the right course, is willing to follow it at whatever cost to himself. He may not be much of a politician, but he is actively interested in all good laws, for bettering the condition of the poor and the oppressed, and is ever ready to give a helping hand to anyone less fortunate than himself. He is not bigoted, and whilst holding firmly to his own convictions, he is ready to recognise the good in all other creeds. He is more anxious to help others to become better men than merely to convert them to his own particular doctrine.

SOME CONCISE DESCRIPTIONS.

As the oak supports and helps to nourish the ivy which clings to it, so should the husband support and shelter his wife from the storms and trials of life, never thinking any joy, sorrow or problem too small or too great to be shared with her.—Sincere Christian, strong principles, intellectual, abstinent, practical, firm will, genial temper, affectionate, tall, not a handsome, but expressive face, too honorable to have given attention without intention.—He must be a thorough Christian and a true gentleman, one who possesses innate gentleness and refinement, polite and courteous to all, but especially to his wife. He must not be content simply to love her, but tell her so daily, by his loving sympathy and thoughtful consideration for her happiness and comfort!—As noble and strong as Daniel, as fine looking as Saul (only not quite so tall), as clever and wise as Solomon, as pure and truthful as Joseph, as kind and considerate as Boaz, as courageous and discriminating as Nehemiah, as manly and modest as Mordecai, as industrious and indefatigable as St. Paul, as patient and uncomplaining as Job, as upright and honest as Samuel, as rich as "the young ruler," as loving and gentle as Jonathan, as studious and thoughtful as Timothy, as earnest and devoted a disciple as St. John.—"I can best express my 'Ideal of a Husband,'" writes one correspondent, by quoting the following lines from Shakespeare:—

"His life was gentle, and the elements So mixed in him that nature might stand up And say to all the world, 'This was a man!'"

Another lady is evidently very fond of her "h's." She writes:—A husband should be head of his household, not hampered with hateful habits, but hale, heedful, helpful, honorable, humorous, with a happy, humane heart, and heavenly-minded.
