As Bad as an Earthquake.

CALAMITY TO AN ENGLISH TOWN.

LONDON, March 5th.—Late last night the people of Sandgate, county of Kent, were aroused by the rocking of the houses and loud rumblings under the ground. The walls split, ceilings fell, and foundations sank and roofs fell. As the inhabitants fled to the streets they found large rents in the ground and were almost overcome by noxious vapors. Everybody supposed the town was being shaken by an earthquake, and as the rumbling continued hundreds fled in a panic to the nearest towns. A few remained behind to remove their furniture from the falling houses. The reports carried abroad by the fugitives caused the troops in the adjacent camp to hasten to the aid of the people still in Sandgate. Soldiers and citizens worked for two hours in moving the most valuable property from the houses and in erecting tents in the fields about a mile outside town for the women and children. At the end of that time the rumbling had ceased, and an investigation was made in the town by the commander of the troops and several citizens. They found that the ground on which Sandgate stands had sunk several feet, and that a less subsidence had extended throughout the surrounding district, effecting in all about a square mile. The gas mains had been broken and the connection of waterpipes had been disturbed so that supplies of both gas and water had been stopped. Many cottages had been wrecked completely, and the better-built houses had been cracked and damaged and thrown out of plumb, so that they could not be occupied with safety. Nevertheless, many of the inhabitants returned to the town toward morning. Between 5 and 6 o'clock, however, they were frightened away by further subsidence of the ground and the recurrence of the rumblings. These phenomena have been repeated several times during the day, and the town is practically deserted. As far as is known no lives have been lost. The disaster was caused by a landslip. The town is built upon a comparatively low cliff, close to the sea. The waves are believed to have undermined the cliff, which then settled, and slipped toward the water, carrying with it the town. Two hundred houses were destroyed.

Liquid Bread.

Mr. W. S. Caine, M. P., speaking at Basingstoke, said:—I remember once seeing over a publichouse door in Liverpool—"Good ale is liquid bread." I went into the house, and said, "Get me a quart of liquid bread." (Laughter.) The landlord said, "Ah, first rate sign, isn't it?" "Yes," I said, "if it's true." "Oh, its true enough, my beer is all right." "Well, give me a bottle to take home." He gave me a bottle of his liquid bread. I took it to Dr. Samuelson, an analytical chemist, and I said to him, "I want you to tell me how much bread there is in this bottle." He smelt it and said, "It's beer." "No, no," I said, "it's liquid bread." "Well," he said, "if you come again in a week, I'll tell you all about it." He charged me three guineas. (Laughter.) In a week's time I went to know all about the liquid bread. The first thing about it was that there was ninety-three per cent of water. (Laughter.) "It's liquid, anyhow," I said, "we'll pass that." (Renewed laughter.) Now let's get on to the bread." "Alcohol, five per cent." "What's alcohol?" I said. "There's the dictionary, you can turn it up for yourself." I turned it up, and found alcohol described as a "powerful narcotic poison." "Well," I thought, "this is the queerest description of bread I ever saw in my life." (Laughter.) Then he gave me a number of small percentages of curious things, which he had put carefully down on each corner of a piece of white paper, and which amounted to about a quarter of a thimbleful of dirty-looking powder. This was the bread—(great laughter)—two per cent. "And there would not be so much as that," said Dr Samuelson, "if it were Bass's or Alsup's. This is bad beer." "So the better the beer the less bread there is in it." "Certainly. It is the business of the brewer to get the bread out of it, not to put the bread into it." This is the simple scientific truth with regard to beer, and the case is stronger with regard to wine and spirits. There is no nourishment in it at all. Science tells you so. Experience tells you so. It is no use for the human body, either as food or medicine.
