Canadian Cattle.

Mr. Herbert Gardner's speech in the British House of Commons is rightly regarded as foreshadowing the early reversal of his decision that Canadian as well as other cattle must be slaughtered immediately on entering the United Kingdom. The Dominion Government has left no stone unturned to convince the British authorities that pleuropneumonia cannot be found in Canada, and that no valid reason ever existed for the present embargo. In addition to a thorough investigation of the localities from which the suspected cattle came, Canada has offered to pay the costs of a further investigation by British official experts, and has subjected to a ninety days' quarantine American cattle crossing the Northwest frontier among settlers' effects. These prompt and vigorous measures seem to have produced a profound effect upon the mind of the president of the British Board of Agriculture. One despatch says: "Mr Gardner is carefully considering official papers recently received from Canada, showing the freedom from the disease and the precautions against its importation." His speech bore traces of the information thus received, and in it he took particular pains to show that his action had not been based on the principal of commercial protection. He "expressed the hope," it is said, "that before long an opportunity would present itself to remove all restrictions upon the Canadian cattle trade, which was of the greatest importance to the Dominion, to Scotland and to the English artisans, who needed the supplies of cheap, good meat which they had been drawing from Canada." By the way, Canadian beef ought to derive some benefit from the advertising it has received. When it is properly appreciated it will not be sold in British shops as "best English."—Kingston News.

Improvement in Arms.

From the improvements in war arms we may form some idea of the nature and destruction of the next war; look at the terrible explosives, dynamite, nitro glycerine, giant power and melinite; and now a Mr. Palle discovers a still safer and more powerful explosive which he calls "herculeite." The common rifle or gun will scarcely have a part in the coming war. Think of such guns as the Maxim. The Maxim gun is perhaps the most sinister of all modern engines of destruction. By utilizing the force of the recoil this fearful weapon, when once started, is made to load and fire of its own accord. All that is necessary is to attach from time to time a fresh ribbon of cartridges and the gun feeds itself. The Austrian war office has recently concluded a series of experiments with it. "It behaves remarkably well," says the report "at ranges up to mile." An average speed of six hundred rounds per minute was obtained from a single barrel; and after upwards of six hundred shots had been fired the gun was still capable of making an "excellent diagram" at six hundred and fifty yards. There is something truly diabolic in the automatic destructiveness of this "well behaved" weapon. And in this connection we have to take into consideration the range and power of cannons, some of which can throw a ball with destructive force twelve miles. "The new breech loading 110-ton gun used in the British service will penetrate 32 inches of wrought iron at a thousand yards. This gun is sixteen and a quarter inches in diameter at the muzzle. An experiment was recently made with the 110 ton gun of H. M. S. Sarsaparil. The projectile was fired at comparatively short range at a target made up as follows: 20 inches compound steel armor, 8 inches wrought iron backing, 20 feet solid oak, 5 feet granite, 11 feet concrete and 6 feet of brick work. The shot struck the target at a range of 2,079 feet per second, went through steel, iron, oak, granite and concrete and stuck in the brick work, though it forced out a large wedge at the back and nearly got through."—Rev. Dr. Willd.

The census record shows that during 1891 23 males and 42 females died who were over 100 years old. One man lived to be 118 and one woman was 112.

A movement has been begun in France looking to the substitution of aluminum for copper in making small coin. The advantages of aluminum in point of lightness and cleanliness are unquestionable.
