The Penalty of Greatness.

In Great Britain and her dependencies there is greater freedom of speech than in any other part of the world where crowds do congregate and governments hold sway. Yet even the subjects of Queen Victoria can only wag their tongues within certain well understood limits, and the more exalted the position of the owner of a tongue, the more circumscribed those limits become. Mr. Clarke Wallace is just now suffering the penalty of greatness in consequence of an ill-advised speech that he made in Kingston the other day. While N. C. W. remained in obscurity, or even after, thanks to Orangeism, he emerged from obscurity, he could indulge in highfalutin' talk without fear of any particularly unpleasant consequences; but when, as "a sop to Cerberus," he was made Controller of Customs by Sir John Thompson, it ought to have occurred to him that treasonable utterances would be totally incompatible with his exalted position. But Mr. Wallace allowed his zeal for Orangeism to outrun his discretion, and showed his ignorance or indifference to the eternal fitness of things by using in his Kingston speech exactly the same language that the M. P. for this afflicted riding used at the Falls. It was bad enough for Sam Hughes, a common member of Parliament, to talk about raising the standard of rebellion in Ireland if the Home Rule bill were passed, but it was far worse for Clarke Wallace, a quasi-Minister, to breathe the same threat. And so Mr. Wallace was hauled over the coals in the House of Commons, and on Tuesday the resolution of Mr. Dawson of Addington, which strongly censured the seditious language of the Controller of Customs, would no doubt have been carried but for the "cuteness" of Mr. Foster, who made the vote one of want of confidence; and even by that ruse the Government only got a majority of 31. Mr. Costigan and Mr. Curran, both Ministers, and several other prominent Conservatives, sided with Mr. Dawson. Clarke Wallace, Sam Hughes, and all the other Protestant Fenians and Orange Guy Fawkeses will in future seek solitude or the congenial society of each other when they want to talk treason, if they know what is good for them.

ACCIDENT.—On Saturday last, while Mr. Henry Magwood of Glenora and his son Albert, aged about 15 years, were drawing a load of logs for fuel it was found that the binder was too slack; and, while they were trying to tighten it, one of the logs rolled off and struck the boy's left leg, both bones of which were broken about four inches above the ankle. Dr. Wilson set the fractures, and under his care the patient is, we are glad to hear, doing well.

SARA LORD BAILEY.—On Friday evening Miss Sara Lord Bailey of Boston gave an entertainment, eked out by local music, in Dickson's hall, in aid of the village skating rink. There was a good attendance, and we think that everyone present could say, in the language of the poet, "she's all my fancy painted her," regarding Miss Bailey, who, as a dramatic reader and elocutionist certainly deserves the warm eulogiums lavished upon her by the Press. We understand that she intends to pay the Falls another visit, and, if so, it is safe to predict that she will have a crowded house.

A HEAVY PENALTY.—On Friday last William Booth of Somerville was fined $12 and $7.45 costs for knocking down and kicking Mr. Henry Coulter of the same township, a man nearly 70 years of age, who was a witness against the Booths about two years ago. Mr. Dickson, the magistrate, gave the defendant a terrible, but richly deserved "tongue thrashing," and said he was sorry that he could only inflict a fine which, with the costs, could not exceed $20. The defendants' brother, who
