The Malays at the Fair.

The fastidious creature from New York who was shocked by Chicago people sitting on their porches would have a stroke of heart disease if he happened in on a Javanese dinner at the Fair. The lilliputians from the east think dining rooms a great extravagance, and they find their verandas good enough for them. They are shaded by a thatched roof above, and the matted floor makes an elastic seat when they squat cross legged. Their shoes, taken off for comfort, sit around among the dishes, but a little thing like that doesn't ruffle a Javanese appetite. Several diners rather around a single tin basin of rice and curry standing on the floor between them and dip up that delicacy with rude tin spoons contributed by orphaned tomato cans, and when they get tired balancing the food on the slippery piece of tin they go for that dish with a little black hand and five fingers.

The Javanese drink coffee brought from home, and their cups are joints of bamboo, a neat and simple contrivance. Since coming to Chicago these pygmies contracted the reprehensible habit of eating bread. A loaf is broken into pieces which are dumped into a basin, and each person grabs a hunk, which may be nearly as big as his head and of course has no butter. The floor is the table, the tin and the bamboo dishes are scattered about promiscuously, every one reaches for what he wants, there is no ceremony, and the "brownies" keep up a merry chatter. These people say they are Malays.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

A Bungling Execution in an Austrian City.

VIENNA, Aug. 7.—A revolting scene occurred on Saturday at an execution at Krems. A convict named Brunner, who was serving a term of imprisonment at Krems, attacked a warden in the prison and killed him. Brunner was tried on a charge of murder, convicted and sentenced to death. Capital punishment in Austria consists of hanging on a post, at the top of which a hook holds the noose. The usual formalities were gone through with and Brunner was hanging with his feet but a short distance from the ground. He struggled and gasped, and it was evident that something was wrong with the arrangement of the noose. Several minutes elapsed and Brunner was still alive, and no one could tell when death would relieve him of his agony. Finally the executioner took matters literally in his own hands, and, mounting a ladder at the back of the post, he placed one hand over the mouth of the struggling man and with the other choked him until life was extinct.

The Referee and His Gun.

DULUTH, Aug. 7.—Duluth sports are greatly excited over an eighteen-round finish fight that took place yesterday afternoon up the St. Louis river, about fifteen miles from Duluth. The mill was between Paddy Harrington, once heavy weight champion of Wisconsin, and Geo. Robinson, a negro heavy-weight, from New York. Nearly all the attendants had been drinking and many were in an ugly mood. The referee drew a revolver and stood off the crowd while the fight went on. The black man went down and the fight was given to Harrington. This increased the excitement and a general fight was started, but was quelled before any serious damage was done.

Were on the Verge of War.

NEW YORK, Aug. 7.—A special to the Sun from London says: Just before leaving town for a holiday on Friday, Lord Rosebery said to a political friend: "We were nearer a war with France a week ago to-day than at any time since Waterloo."

Now that the crisis has passed, the facts about the momentous two days of the 28th and 29th of July are gradually coming out. Englishmen are learning with genuine alarm how slender is the thread by which the sword is suspended over Europe.

The Scientific American gives a picture of three white cattle, the Jumbo team, weighing 6,000 pounds. They are half brothers, with not three days difference in their ages, and are all three as white as snow, though from cows that were not alike. They are six years old, and were bred by Mr. James Galloway, Pontiac, Michigan.

A collection of postage stamps has been disposed of for 60,000 francs by a native of Bordeaux.

Lord Randolph Churchill has gone to France accompanied by his wife. It is said that he is seriously ill and it will be long before he is seen in England in public again.
