

Couldn't Stand Him.

AN INTERESTING LITTLE STORY FOR CUPID'S VICTIMS.

"Why did I break off with him?" echoed the stylish young lady who had stepped upon a Woodward avenue car in a way to delight the conductor.

"Well, it was a little hard, for mamma was his staunch supporter from the beginning. But I simply couldn't endure him."

"But he's smart, handsome and well off" objected the other girl, who was a party to the conversation.

"Yes, and he knows it. He's a marked example of what the boys call a good fellow. His manner with me was simply unendurable. If I expressed an opinion on any important subject, he'd give a look that said: 'Why, she positively assumes to have intelligence. There is something like a power of coherent thought in her mind. Can she really be one of those women who think she thinks?'"

"That would be rather aggravating." "Aggravating? I was angry enough to swear like a sailor, call him names or tell him to get out and stay out, but I knew that he wouldn't understand. He's one of those men who think that a woman should be nothing more than an automaton in the domestic and social world. If it hadn't been for creating talk, I'd have carried a gun or a big bowie knife and done something to shock him."

"Oh, Mame!" "Yes, I would. He made me desperate. When he expressed admiration for me, it was as if he were approving a fine picture or a good cigar. I just told him one evening that he must be mistaken in me, for I had a soul, a mind and a whole lot of womanly aspirations. It frightened him so that he left his umbrella, and I've never seen him since."—Detroit Free Press.

She Would Not Tell Her Name.

She had just come up from Mississippi to "hire out" in Memphis, and all of her friends at home promised to write to her. After the new of the city wore off and the ache of homesickness began to make itself felt, she went to the "general delivery" at the postoffice to inquire for her mail. She still had her moss-grown suspicion of "town folks" and their dark and devious ways, so she marched aggressively up to the general delivery window and demanded, "Any letter here for me?"

"What is your name?" asked the clerk.

"Tain't none of yo business what my name is!" she responded indignantly, and without further parley she left the postoffice, angrily muttering to herself, "I ain't gwine to tell that white man what my name is. Lak to know what business 'tis o' hisn what my name is." The cautious old body didn't hear from home that day.—Memphis Scimitar

NEWSPAPER LAW.

1. A postmaster is required to give notice by letter (returning the paper does not answer the law), when a subscriber does not take his paper out of the office and state the reasons for its not being taken. Any neglect to do so makes the postmaster responsible to the publisher for payment.
2. If any person orders his paper discontinued he must pay all arrearages, or the publisher may continue to send it until payment is made, and collect the whole amount, whether it is taken from the office or not. There can be no legal discontinuance until the payment is made.
3. Any person who takes a paper from the post-office, whether directed to his name or another, or whether he has subscribed or not, is responsible for the pay.
4. If a subscriber orders his paper to be stopped at a certain time, and the publisher continues to send, the subscriber is bound to pay for it if he takes it out of the post-office. This proceeds upon the ground that a man must pay for what he uses.
5. The courts have decided that refusing to take newspapers and periodicals from the post-office, or removing and leaving them uncollected for, is prima facie evidence of intentional fraud.
