What Socialism Means.

Monopoly's curse, the piling up of colossal fortunes by the few at the expense of the many, the weary, blighting slavery of the masses, the bitter, grinding poverty which seeks refuge in suicide or the sale of body and soul, will never be abolished until the principles of socialism are adopted.

Socialism is not anarchy; it is not the support of the idle and vicious at the expense of the toilers; it is not a robbing of the industrious by an enforced division of his gains with those who refuse to work; it is none of these, but society, as present organized, permits and fosters just such abuses. Men fear socialism as an unholy thing because they attribute to it the intention, to do that which they recognize as outrageous. Ostrich-like, however, they hide their heads in the sands of tradition and endure the very evils which they charge that socialism will cause. The truth is that socialism means the abolition and destruction of all such abuses.

Socialism means the enjoyment by every man of the fruits of his own labor; it means an opportunity for the overworked man and the weary, heartbroken woman to partake of the culture and refinement now denied them and to feel the warm glow of comfort and independence; it means that the worker shall enjoy the whole of every day's labor performed by him, and that no part thereof shall be given up under duress to the support of those who waste it in riot and wantonness; it means that the manifold riches of nature shall be the common heritage of all men, and no man shall compel another to be his slave; that the man who works shall eat the food, wear the clothes, live in the house and have the time and opportunity outside the hours of labor necessary for his support and the discharge of his duties to society, to cultivate his mind and train his body. These are the vital principles of socialism, and, when realized, there will be no more human brethren to the ox; neither will there be human vampires who suck the blood of toiling men and women.

Co-operation.

I have already shown what co-operation is and what it can do. The trusts have given us examples of the advantages of co-operation. Men now work and slave from eight to fourteen hours a day. If it were not for the labor unions men would be working twenty-four hours a day if they could stand it. Some people to-day have a million times the amount of necessities they can ever use. Millions of people to-day do not know where the next loaf of bread is coming from. If there were an equal distribution of the necessities of life, and if society were properly organized, and if the machines and trusts and the railroads were owned by the collectivity, then food, clothes and shelter would be as plentiful as water.
There could be no millionaires and no paupers. Every man would have to do some useful work in order to get a living, and he would not have to hunt long for that work. Instead of working ten hours a day, every man would need work only three or four hours a day. Probably not a thinking man lives to-day who does not believe in cooperation. The difference of opinion exists only on the question of how best to cooperate. Some say private cooperation like the trusts and department stores, and others say government cooperation. I say neither one is right.

I believe in co-operation by organized society and I choose not to call this society government. Universal co-operation means socialism, but socialism means a dozen different things. Some socialists uses the word government. I frequently use that word too, because it is the most convenient. To-day I favor co-operation through government, but I maintain that this co-operation will finally abolish what is called government and we will then have voluntary co-operation through the collectivity. Call it government if you will, for, like the rose, it will smell as sweet.

Worse Than Yellow Literature.

The papers are filled with accounts of murders and suicides. The war fever has a maddening effect on the people. This and similar paragraphs have repeatedly appeared in these columns.
Last week a Toronto lad of 14 shot his father, and the coroner's jury denounced the reading of detective stories.
Worse than detective stories, however, is the war literature published in nearly all our daily and weekly papers. To kill an enemy is pictured as sport by men of high station in life. A member of Parliament in South Africa likens the sport to "hunting rabbits." Bayo-netting the enemy is spoken of as "pig-sticking." Life is a thing of little value and death a tribute of worth to the vanquished. Who can picture the effect upon the youth of our land, especially when teachers, in Toronto, at least, when news of battles arrive, stop their lessons and talk sometimes for an hour about victories won for the flag by patriotic soldiers! No more lessons can be mastered on those days; and when the children proceed to their homes they are attracted by bulletin boards on which are pictures of men, women and children using firearms, knives and bludgeons with deadly effect. Yes, yellow literature is bad—very bad—but there are worse evils in our community to which the coroner's jury on unfortunate Peter McIntyre made no reference last week, and concerning which the press and pulpits in Toronto and elsewhere are all but silent.—Citizen and Country.

A Sensible Girl.

A New York paper has found a sensible girl. A correspondent describes her thus: At our hotel was a beautiful young girl, educated, clever, thoroughly up to date. A handsome fellow was paying her the most devoted attention, whenever he was sober enough to do so, and all of us felt very anxious lest his attractive manners and lavish display of wealth should ruin the girl. One evening since she came into my room, and, settling herself among the pillows of the couch, said: "John proposed to-night, went down on his knees, said I was the only power on earth that could save him, and if I didn't consent to become his wife he would fill a drunkard's grave."

"What did you say?" I asked breathlessly.

"Well," she replied, "I told him that I was not running a Keeley Cure, but if he really wanted to be saved from a drunkard's grave I could give him the address of several I had heard highly recommended!"

CONCERT.—A grand concert in aid of the India famine fund will be given in Dickson's hall on the evening of Thursday next, the 31st inst. As the entertainment will be first class and the object is a good one, the hall ought to be well filled. For particulars see bills.

BURNED TO DEATH.—A terrible tragedy happened last Tuesday near Valencia, in the township of Mariposa.
While Mrs. Joseph Pearn, Jr., was burning caterpillars' nests in the fruit trees, her clothing by some means caught fire and was soon totally destroyed.
Picking up her little boy, about two years old, she ran screaming to the home of her nearest neighbor, Mr.
Brown and was taken from there to the home of her father-in-law, Mr.
Joseph Pearn, Sr., in Fenelon, where she died about 2. a m on Wednesday.
She was a daughter of Mr. George Gale, of Rosedale, and had been married only three or four years.
