

The Way of the World.

His youth was spent upon a farm
In some backwoods locality,
And so the city had a charm,
A strong potentiality.
That seemed to urge him day and night
To seek its great variety,
To leave the fields behind and write
A drama of society.

Now, had he been in city born,
Where crowds are really maddening,
Far from the waving wheat and corn
And sylvan silence gladdening,
It would have been just his caprice
To show his versatility,
By writing pastorals of peace
And ballads of tranquillity.

'Tis ever thus! What man can do—
This is the rule immutable—
He contemplates with sullen view,
And deems the task unsuitable,
While that of which he knows the least
He tackles with avidity—
He deems there is a fruitful feast
Where there is most aridity.

The man who's built to run a mill
Would seek a berth congressional;
The one who's used to axe and drill
Would play us a recessionist;
The millionaire who deals in stocks
Has country-life propensities;
The farmer, gazing on his ox,
Would deal with Trade's immensities.

The modern maiden is beguiled
By some absurd "affinity";
The woman who could rear a child
Is aping masculinity.
They all forget they must progress
In fields that are permitted them,
Nor strive from life to woo success
For which it never fitted them.
—Elliot Flower, in Life.

A Bluff Called.

HOW TWO LADIES MADE A CORPORATION
TEAR ITS HAIR.

Two women, whose names should be placed on the same tablet with the Pompeian sentinel and the boy who stood on the burning deck, boarded a trolley car in one of the upper suburbs of New York and firmly ensconced themselves in the little vestibule sacred to the motorman.

"You can't stay here, ladies," said that official briskly.

He was wrong. The ladies staid. He called the conductor, and the women called the conductor's bluff. The conductor called five policemen, and the five policemen called an inspector.

The inspector, backed by his five subordinates, the conductor and the motorman, glared at the females and said harsh things to them, but they held to their coign of vantage. Then the inspector shook his head and turned away. And the disciplined quintet of subordinates shook their heads and turned away.

"You have a high forehead, inspector," said one of the dames in a tone that was meant to be complimentary.

And the conductor and the motorman sat down on the side of the road way and waited. They couldn't go ahead with those woman in the front vestibule, and they couldn't get 'em out. In the meantime cars were lining up behind them clear to Harlem bridge, and excursionists of all degrees were raging at the delay. But rules are rules, and for three hours traffic was suspended by those obstinate ladies.

Finally the irate superintendent in his office several miles away had a happy thought.

"Sidetrack that car," he telephoned, "and let those women enjoy it for the rest of their natural lives!"

So the motorman sidetracked the car, and the traffic was resumed. And there the obstinate ones sat in silent state until the sun climbed up above White Plains to stare at them, and then they stole from the vestibule and boarded another car and stood with the common herd, and perhaps inwardly chuckled over the way in which they had blocked the workings of a brash and boastful corporation.

Hard to Understand Woman.

"Oh, you can't please a woman," he said disgustedly; "it's no use trying."
"What's happened now?"

"I met that pretty Miss Brown in a dark hallway and kissed her. I didn't think she'd mind, you know."
"And she did mind?"

"Well, she pretended to be very angry, so I thought I'd smooth things down by telling her that it was all a mistake, that I thought she was somebody else."
"And then?"

"Why, then she really was very angry."

Wise Man.

"Great idea, that of Mike's," said the enthusiastic heeler of the better sort. "He isn't satisfied with shaking hands with his constituents in the ordinary way. When he meets one of them, he grabs both his hands."
"Ain't that rather overdoing it?"

said the cautious person.

"It might look that way to you, but Mike knows his business. As long as he holds the fellow's hands his watch is safe."

NEWSPAPER LAW.

1. A postmaster is required to give notice by letter (returning the paper does not answer the law), when a subscriber does not take his paper out of the office and state the reasons for its not being taken. Any neglect to do so makes the postmaster responsible to the publisher for payment.
2. If any person orders his paper discontinued he must pay all arrearages, or the publisher may continue to send it until payment is made, and collect the whole amount, whether it is taken from the office or not. There can be no legal discontinuance until the payment is made.
3. Any person who takes a paper from the post-office, whether directed to his name or another, or whether he has subscribed or not, is responsible for the pay.
4. If a subscriber orders his paper to be stopped at a certain time, and the publisher continues to send, the subscriber is bound to pay for it if he takes it out of the post-office. This proceeds upon the ground that a man must pay for what he uses.
5. The courts have decided that refusing to take newspapers and periodicals from the post-office, or removing and leaving them uncollected for, is prima facie evidence of intentional fraud.
