PREDESTINED.

Wherever lands are flowing With honey and with milk—Wherever gold is glowing,
Or cotton, corn or silk, We yearn to preach the gospel To every mother's son,
And when the cusses spurn it We preach it with a gun.

Let hoary heads in Congress Deplore the lusty strife!
Arm-chairs for all the dotards!
We want "the strenuous life!"
In vain their parlor precepts
The Golden Rule unfold; We're on a different basis—
And that's the Rule of Gold.

The world is to the White Man By right Divine assigned;
When Destiny is calling We are not color-blind.
The Black and Brown and Yellow Have served some end, no doubt.
But all this "Man and Brother" Is certainly played out.

The milk-and-water preachers Had best their prattle cease; We've little use at present For any "Prince of Peace."
An up-to-date Messiah Is what we want to see;
The Gospels are back numbers;
This isn't Galilee.

Yet our assimilation
Is most benevolent,
And we absorb the alien With kindest of intent.
But "Free and Equal" problems We really can't discuss,
And when we say "benevolent,"
Of course we mean to us.

We are the chosen people—
The long-elected seed—We're on the track of Glory And grow in grace and greed.
In vain the Peace Commission Would check our spreading girth;
We want no New Jerusalem;
We only want the earth.
—Edward A. Church, in Life.

The Man for the Time.

(From the Toronto Star.) People are being told that this country is facing a great danger because all the sixty-five constituencies of Quebec but eight have elected supporters of Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

What is the danger?
It is said to be the likelihood of French-Canadian domination, the parliamentary men of that race being almost exclusively on one side. Another form the danger might take would be that the Conservative party might bluntly undertake to organize the other provinces on race lines to defeat the Premier who has been so generously supported in Quebec.

The good sense of the country will take care of both these dangers. There will be no French domination in a parliament where the French-Canadians are outnumbered by more than four to one, and no campaign on race lines could succeed against Quebec unless the cause for making it was very real.

The present situation might have been foreseen. It was bound to come.
The confederation of the provinces made it inevitable that in due course of time the French-Canadians of Quebec would produce a man who, in the Parliament of the union, would be the most conspicuous figure and the most commanding influence there. It was impossible to foretell whether he would be a Liberal or a Conservative, but in a free and equal parliament it was bound to happen that in ten, or twenty, or fifty years after Confederation the people of Quebec would contribute to public life a man of such parts that he would naturally become leader of one of the two political parties. Sir Wilfrid Laurier is the man. He is the enthusiastically admired and loyally followed leader of the Liberal party of the Dominion. He is the most distinguished man in the whole parliament. He is the first French-Canadian to become undisputed leader of one of the two great parties; first French-Canadian to become Premier of the Dominion.

He played a large part at the Queen's diamond jubilee, when all the world looked on. As an orator he is renowned at home and abroad. Under his rule the country prospered and developed as never before. All this appealed to the imagination and pride of his compatriots. Need anyone be surprised that it was so?

"But unless the other provinces resent the solid way in which the people of his province support him, how is he to be defeated? What better thing could happen to this country than to have as premier a man enjoying the fullest confidence of both races in Canada—a man truly Canadian. If the people of his country are ever to be led to join hands in real amity, here is the man capable of bringing it about.

Already he has been put to two hard tests. In 1896 the church ranged itself against him, but the people adhered to him, and he settled the school question without coercion, settled it amicably, as no such vexed questions could have been settled by any other man in sight at the time. The moment came when troops were wanted from Canada to fight abroad, and Conservatives said:
"Now, this country ought to send troops; must send troops—but Quebec won't stand for it; if Laurier sends troops Quebec will desert him."

He did the right thing, and Quebec did not desert. The admiration of his fellowmen for him is such that it has tided him over the danger he incurred in the school question, and the second danger in sending troops abroad to fight for the Empire. In both cases he was strong enough to carry the people of Quebec with him, although their predilections pulled strongly the other way.

This is the despair of the Conservative party. Quebec trusts him, even where the appearance of things and the drift of events would ordinarily make the province openly hostile to any English-Canadian leader in exactly the same position.

Their pride in this man of their own race, who by right of ability is premier, is natural and not alarming. Once they learn that confederation is a real and not a paper union, and that the minority in this country is not one of race (which would be permanent) but one of party (which shifts and changes, and this is just), they will relax, and it will be found that in Quebec, as elsewhere under British institutions, people form into rival parties of almost equal strength.

The novelty of having one of themselves as premier gratifies them, and properly so. That the other provinces concur in the selection of one of them for this honor will do much to show them that confederation is real. This will be the result, unless a wrong and disastrous use is sought to be made of the situation by politicians ranting against French domination.

This man belonging to the race minority and enjoying their enthusiastic admiration, belongs by habit of mind and by political education to the race majority, and gains an ever increasing confidence. He is the link between the races. He is destined to exert the fusing, harmonizing influence that is needed.

How is he to be defeated? It is not necessary to defeat him. The question interests only the Conservative party. But to the people and to the Empire it is more important that Canada should have wise and harmonious government than that it should have a Conservative Government.

Eighteen head of cattle, shipped in a closed car, were found smothered on arrival at Ottawa.

According to The London Daily Mail the Duke and Duchess of York have definitely decided to visit Canada.

Manager Shimon and Director Nelson of Dumbelle Bank, Isle of Man, which recently failed, were sentenced to five years' imprisonment, and other officials to lesser terms, for falsifying the books of the institution.
