The Coal Strike.

In a recent issue of the Toronto Sun "Bystander" says:

"This most disastrous coal strike must have gone far to put an end to the notion that strikes can be prevented by judicial arbitration. What court could compel a host of 147,000 men, many of them foreigners and wanderers, to comply with an award binding them to give their labor at a fixed price for a given term, without regard to the fluctuations of the labor market or to their own will? The security for compliance taken by the courts in Australia, we are told, is a deposit of money. How could it be obtained in such a case as this of the miners? The fact is that when people talk about arbitration, it is often not arbitration, but mediation, that they mean. Mediation may be, and often has been, usefully employed. It helps to quiet passion and to set aside the overbearing arrogance of capital on one side, and on the other the virulence of labor leaders who subsist by industrial war. The only antidote at present visible to strikes is the improvement of the daily relations between capital and labor. Between the owners of the mines and their miners the relation was probably as harsh and unsympathetic as possible, while the work of the mine was exceptionally hard and dangerous. The president of the operators' committee the other day put forth a rather unctuous manifesto, to the effect that Divine Providence had given the direction of the mines and mining labor into the hands of Christian managers, who would be sure to do right. Is it certain that the Divine commission has been very religiously fulfilled?"

We doubt that "the relation between the owners of the mines and their miners is as harsh and unsympathetic as possible." It will become still more so as time rolls on, and in the end there will be bloodshed, unless the Government take possession of the mines—a course we heard advocated the other day by a prominent resident of Lindsay, who (to that extent, at any rate,) is a Socialist, though he does not call himself one. The miners are, quite justifiably, kicking against starvation—or semi-starvation—wages; the "coal barons" will not treat them fairly until compelled to do so, which will be never; the crisis which has sent coal up almost above poor people's reach, and causes those in only moderate circumstances to use bad language, will be repeated until the State—that is, the whole people—step in and take possession of nature's supply of fuel. Public ownership or bloody war are the only alternatives, and we think that the former will be the one adopted.

Millionaire Farmers.

In Ainslee's Magazine W. R. Draper tells of the ease and rapidity with which farmers in Kansas and Oklahoma acquire wealth. They think nothing of buying two or three rubber-tired buggies at a time, and some of them ride around on automobiles while superintending the operations of their laborers. It is enough to make farmers with a little capital flock into K. and O. from all parts of Canada and the States. Here is Mr. Draper's account of one man's success:

"One of the richest farmers in the Kansas wheat belt is John T. Stewart, who went to the State five years ago. He borrowed fifty dollars from a friend, rented a quarter section of land in Sumner County, and began work. To day he is worth two million dollars, and his income from wheat in 1901 was $64,000. He is known as the wheat king of Kansas. There are twenty-three millionaires in Kansas, fifteen of whom are farmers living on farms and running them as an investment. Perhaps they have not all of their fortune invested in land, but a goodly portion of it is. Solomon Besley of Wellington placed $31,000 in wheat land last year and realized 30 per cent. on his investment, or ten times as much as he receives from money loaned in Illinois."

The Country's Best Interests.

The Toronto Star says: "Nobody will find fault with the statement made at Stratroy by Hon. George W. Ross that Canada should frame her tariff to serve her own interests, even though it may injure the trade of the neighboring Republic. If this is described as concurring in the views of high protectionists, then are we all of that political faith. Canada for the Canadians. Let us promote our own welfare. There is no possibility of dispute as to the soundness of this attitude. But there may be differences of opinion as to the method by which Canada can best serve her own interests. Since the dawn of creation no public man has argued that his country's best interests should not be served by her Government, but there have been many serious disagreements as to how this could best be done."

Millinery Opening.

The millinery prospects for fall and winter were well set forth in Miss Washburn's attractive opening display on Monday and Tuesday of this week. Besides many ready-to-wear and untrimmed hats in camel's hair and felt, there were dozens of handsomely trimmed sample hats. The place of honor was held by a beautiful reseda-green velvet hat in mushroom shape. The crown and brim were draped with velvet, and strapped from crown to under brim with velvet, ornamented with cut steel buckles. A facing of wired shirring, also of reseda green velvet, and a Napoleon bow of velvet and plush ribbon in the same shade and fastened with steel buckles, completed the under effect. A bow of plush ribbon was gracefully arranged at the back of the brim and a handsome feather ornament rested on the left front. A beautiful picture hat was of black beaver, simply but effectively trimmed with two large ostrich feathers around the front and left side and held by a cocochon. A scarf of black liberty satin ribbon over the left side and drawn under the brim ended in a long sash bow falling over the hair at the back. A pretty picture hat was depicted in the new brown and yellow combination. The upper brim was in brown velvet and the facing in pale yellow satin in a circle on the top of the crown surrounded by brown velvet, and two brown flecked yellow wings fastened by large rosettes completed the color effect. A handsome Gibson hat was done up with a shirred crown of fawn silk velvet, the under brim draped in fawn felt dotted with black camel's hair. A pair of wings were knotted in with white liberty satin ribbon draped in plume effect at the left side, and a cascade of burnt orange velvet finished the under brim. A new turban in gray chinchilla draped with hunter's green velvet was greatly admired. A bird with grey and green effect in the plumage was fastened to the front brim. Another pretty turban had the crown draped with white chiffon with a lattice work skillfully done in black chenille. A pearl cocochon holding a rosette of white liberty satin and a black and white bird finished the under brim, which was draped in black velvet. A black picture hat with a large bell crown and a couple of black plumes fastened by a ribbon rosette and handsome cream colored applique under the brim, deserves special mention. Also among the specialties there is a young girl's hat. It is in pale gray camel's hair in Dolly Varden shape, gracefully draped with Dolly Varden silk in shades of gray and blue, bound with blue velvet. Another, also for a young girl, is depicted in dark gray felt, with large red silk bow and out steel buckle in front of brim: Two flat red quills crossed on the crown give a unique effect.

Mrs. Joseph Irwin, of Loomis, Manitoba, accompanied by a little son about eight years old, is spending a couple of months with her sister-in-law, Mrs. Edward English, and other relatives.

Powles' Corner.

(Correspondence of the Gazette.)

Some of the folks in this section were interested in a wedding in the township of Harvey last Wednesday, and there is a probability of a wedding in this community, before many months, in which a good deal of interest will be taken.

Mrs. James Powles received the sad news, a few days ago, that her brother, Rev. James Argue, had died in Winnipeg, Manitoba.

Mr. Alexander McGee and Mr. J. B. Powles were busy filling their silos the first of this week.

The liquor men are putting up $35,000 to beat those who are trying to evangelize the world, and those who are endeavoring to lift up the fallen and care for the dying. Suppose the liquor men owned a railroad; would they employ men who freely imbibed to run trains in safety? No, they would go over to the Prohibitionists to get their men.

Send a post-card to the Wilmer Atkinson Co., of Philadelphia, and get a copy of the Farm Journal, and see if you do n't like it. If you send the publishers the largest list of subscribers you get a hundred dollars a year for life.

Fell's Station.

(Correspondence of the Gazette.)

Miss Lizzie Hughes, of Toronto city, is spending a couple of months at her home (Green Mountain home).

Mrs. W. Wood and family spent a few days visiting relatives near Cobocok.
